Equals Year's High

Washington sweltered through its most uncomfortable day of the summer yesterday.

The official temperature, recorded on a shaded thermometer atop the Weather Bureau, soared to 96 at 3:15 p. m., a tie with the temperature of June 16. However, that was only part of the unpleasant story, for accompanying the blazing heat was a humidity of 41 that was equally to blame for the perspiring brows and damp shirts.

13-Year-Old Boy Drowned

A 13-year-old colored boy seeking relief was drowned in the Potomac River, another youth was injured in a swimming pool, and seven persons were treated for heat prostration.

Thousands of employes of the Federal and District governments were sent home early, so intense were the heat and humidity after the lunch period.

The Weather Bureau offered hope for relief last night by predicting "fair weather with moderate temperatures" for today, with cloudy weather tomorrow and showers by tomorrow night.

Showers caused the temperature to drop 16 degrees in three hours last night, Weather Bureau officials reported. At 6 p. m. the temperature registered 95 degrees, and at 9 p. m. it had dropped to 79 degrees.

21 Degrees Above Normal

Yesterday's temperature was 21 degrees above normal, normal being the average over a period of 49 years. However, it was far from being a record for August.

The records of the Weather Bureau bear out a widespread conviction that this has been an unusually torrid summer in Washington. For example, it was the hottest May in ten years, the average temperature being 68—4.3 above normal. June also was unusually hot, only one other June in a ten-year period being hotter, that of 1934. This July, however, was below normal, its average temperature, 76.2, being the lowest since 1933.

Channel Claims Life

The boy drowned yesterday was 13-year-old James E. Coles, 1822 Swan street northwest. He had gone swimming with three other boys in the Georgetown Channel. His body was recovered by Harbor Police and the Fire Rescue Squad.

George Hall, 17, of 4439 Ivy street, Brentwood, Md., suffered severe scalp lacerations while diving in McKinley swimming pool.

Those suffering heat prostration were Mrs. Lucy E. Hall, 27, 2138 California street northwest, who collapsed at Eighteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue and was treated by an Emergency Hospital interne; Tilghman Pumphries, 39, colored, 1611 New Jersey avenue northwest, treated at Casualty Hospital; Chris Harris, 52, colored, 2439 Snow's court, treated at Emergency Hospital; John Shymansky, 37, of 116 C street northeast, treated at Casualty Hospital; Taylor Sloane, 11, of Corsicans, Tex., stricken at the Washington Airport and treated at Emergency Hospital; James Kager, 38, colored, treated at Gallinger; Bernard J. Kinnahan, 32, 4319 River road northwest, taken to Casualty.

D. C. Police Radio Prevents Useless Philadelphia Trip

Police have their uses, they demonstrated last night, beyond the eternal pursuit of malefactors.

Marshall K. Crawford, of 238 Massachusetts avenue northeast, left Washington last night to meet a friend in Philadelphia and in a few minutes the friend called to cancel the date. Mrs. Crawford asked police to help and a radio lookout was put on the air.

Crawford was intercepted at Bladensburg road and the District line and spared the time, trouble and expense of a useless trip.

40-Year-Old Wife of the Former Attorney General Sick Since March; Suffered Relapse After Florida Trip

Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, wife of the former Attorney General, died last night at Ruthven, their home overlooking Rock Creek Park in the 2700 block of Tilden street northwest. She was 40.

Ill since March with high blood pressure, her condition became critical several weeks ago when, according to her physician, Dr. Paul F. Dickens, her illness was complicated by a heart ailment. She was stricken soon after returning from a vacation trip to Florida.

Born at Darien, Conn., November 4, 1898, the former Miss Cecilia Waterbury was educated at Columbia University, the New School of Social Research at New York, the Sorbonne and the Alliance Francaise in Paris. She became secre-

Bomb Bandit Takes $2,500 In Annapolis

Hands Note to Teller Threatening Blast, Walks Out With Loot

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Aug. 9.—A smiling, youthful robber who obtained $2,500 from the Annapolis Banking & Trust Co. with a scribbled note threatening to "blow the bank up," was sought tonight by police of four States.

WILEY

State police broadcast a description of the youth after he walked unmolested from the bank with a money bag containing bills of large denomination, obtained from a teller, W. Emerson Wiley, 25.

Two agents from the Federal Bureau of Investigation arrived to assist police, since the bank is a member of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

The bank is about 100 yards from the Governor's mansion. City police said it was the first bank robbery here in modern times.

Bank officials disclosed tonight a shipment of $9,000 had arrived a few minutes before the robbery. Wiley counted out the $2,500 from the stack lying beneath the counter.

The robber, about 30, with a plaster patch on his right cheek and his left hand swathed in a bandage, walked into the bank about 1:30 p. m. Clerks said he scribbled on depositor's slips for about ten min-

France Accused Of Smuggling Films to U. S.

Grand Jury Charges Diplomatic Pouches Helped Evade Duty

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 9.—The French Ministry of Foreign Affairs was accused in a Federal grand jury presentment today of permitting its diplomatic pouches to be used for smuggling commercial travel films into the United States.

The jury also charged the French Government Tourist Bureau, the French consulate in this city, the French Line and its general manager, Morin de Linclays, and eight other individuals were active in a scheme to evade payment of the United States customs duties.

Paid Fines of $4,459

The grand jury began its investigation July 13 as an aftermath of the arrest on March 20 of Andre de la Varre, commercial photographer accused of having caused 37,000 feet of film taken in Algeria, France, Holland, Hungary, Morocco, Switerland and Tunisia to be brought here in nine diplomatic pouches on the steamship Paris last January.

De La Varre has since paid civil fines and penalties totaling $4,459.

The presentment set forth that in view of the "comity of nations," and of the friendly relations existing between France and the United States, it deemed the forwarding of a certified copy to Secretary Hull the best course.

French Line officials here said that they knew nothing about the matter and that De Linclays was at present on a trip in the West.

Baby With Heart Outside Body Has Chance to Live Indefinitely

By the Associated Press

Manila, Aug. 9.—A specialist said baby Mary Heart Rafael, born Monday with her heart completely outside her body, might live indefinitely but it would be impossible to correct the rare malformation through an operation.

Any infection of the organ would cut short the little Filipino's life.

The exposed heart, resting on the baby's chest and connected to the body by a large artery, is protected by a stemless cocktail glass.

Doctors said they were using a balanced aqueous solution to prevent dehydration of the heart and to maintain normal moisture. The solution substitutes for the normal body fluid.

Dr. Jesus Celius, heart specialist of Santa Tomas University, said it would be impossible to place the heart in its natural position within the body. To do so would mean shutting off the connecting artery and would make death only a matter of minutes.

The baby was in better condition today than yesterday. She weighed 7 pounds at birth and except for the exposed heart was pronounced normal.

The father, a 31-year-old min-

Virginians Fight to Tie At Bull Run

1st Re-enacts 3-Day Yankee March in 3 Hours as 116th Holds Historic Hill

By John G. Norris.
A Staff Correspondent.

Manassas, Va., Aug. 9. — The "Fighting First" Virginia Infantry turned Yankee for today and repeated McDowell's advance on Bull Run here as the Guard brigade training got under way.

Grandsons of the men who played such a prominent role in the Confederate Army moved up from Fairfax in a two-sided engagement against the 116th Virginia Infantry entrenched on renowned Henry Hill.

But where the march took McDowell's army three days, the modern troops, mechanized for the maneuver, made it in less than three hours.

Loaded on fast trucks bristling with machine guns, the Virginians advanced along back roads to a position near the old stone house on Lee highway. A motorized battalion of the Fifty-fourth Field Artillery Brigade accompanied them. As the latter took position to support them, the infantrymen dismounted, deployed into formation and attacked.

Col. J. Fulmer Bright, Mayor of Richmond and commander of the First, led his men against the 116th, under Col. George Alexander. After contact was made all along the line, the umpires stopped the battle fearing the defenders would mistake the "enemy" for real "damn Yankees" and come to blows. Brig. Gen. S. Gardner Waller, Ninety-first Brigade commander, said that no one won, but that both sides carried out their mission successfully.

Marylanders in Hot Fight

Brig. Gen. Amos W. W. Woodcock's Maryland Brigade also was engaged in a hot fight. The First Maryland Infantry took up position on high ground east of the Manassas stone house road, and defended an attack by that "Dandy Fifth," supported by tanks.

The First's commander, Brig. Gen. John D. Markey, expected the main effort of the enemy to be on his left flank and concentrated his strength there. The Fifth, however, advanced on the right, and then attempted a piercing movement into the center. A patrol of the Third Battalion, First Infantry, and two field guns of Battery C, 110th Artillery, which was supporting the First, were captured.

Troops of the 121st Engineers, D. C. National Guard, spent the morning building pontoon bridges across Occoquan Creek. Equipped with metal boats, the regiment practiced laying out two-way spans capable of holding a 7½ ton load. On Friday, the 121st will be thrown together with the 103d Engineers' it was announced, with Col. John W. Oehmann in command.

No Sickness Reported

The District Engineer unit celebrated its sixteenth birthday here in camp today and Col. Oehmann praised his men for their record so far in the encampment. Declaring they exemplified the best type of guardsmen today, Oehmann said there had not been one case of

U. S. Vessel's Crew Puts Down Fire In Mid-Atlantic

Boston, (Friday) Aug. 10 (AP).—The American freighter Pipestone County radioed early today she had won a battle with fire that broke out in one of her holds in midocean and had resumed her journey toward France.

Two Coast Guard cutters that had been speeding to the aid of the vessel, which reported her position as 770 miles out on the Atlantic, swung about to return to regular assignments.

The brief account gave no details of the crew's battle with the fire or of the damage caused. The ship carried a general cargo, and a crew of 35.

Sino-Soviet Arms Dicker Reported

Hongkong, Aug. 9 (AP).—Informed Chinese sources said today that China and Soviet Russia were negotiating for large-scale exchange of Chinese raw materials for Russian war supplies and railway materials within the framework of the commercial treaty signed at Moscow June 16.

The informants said an eventful agreement might call for Russian commercial credits to China, perhaps in exchange for economic concessions in northwest China.

Rebuff in Balkans

By the Associated Press

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Aug. 9.—Yugoslavia has refused German and Italian demands for use of her railroads and axis supervision of her economic and military centers in event of European war, it was learned tonight on the highest authority.

With the full support of Britain and France, Premier Cvetkovich will fly to Italy tomorrow in a Yugoslav army bomber, it was said, to tell Italy's leaders bluntly that Yugoslavia is determined to maintain strict neutrality even if it is necessary to use her arms to do so.

Fort Building Speeded

The government issued orders to speed construction of fortifications on the German frontier.

Germany and Italy were said to have described their proposals as a form of "benevolent" neutrality.

Besides use of Yugoslavia's railroads and supervision of her economic and military centers in wartime, it was said the German-Italian demands would give them complete access to all Yugoslavia's war materials and foodstuffs in case of war.

Use of her railroads, besides giving them rail connections through the Yugoslav province of Slovenia in addition to those they already have through Brenner Pass, would give them troop transportation in any advance toward Rumania and the east.

The Premier's sudden decision came after "indefinite" suspension of negotiations with Vladimir Macek, peasant leader, over demands of 5,000,000 Croats for home rule.

Direct Talks With Ciano

Cvetkovich's plans were understood to call for direct talks with Italy's foreign minister Ciano.

Prince Paul, senior regent of Yugoslavia, was said to have explained the axis demands to the British and French governments on his recent trip to London and Paris.

Authoritative sources said Britain and France had told the regent they would back Yugoslavia in case she came into conflict with the Rome-Berlin axis, for her surrender would mean a staggering blow had been dealt to Rumania, Greece and Turkey, which have joined the French-British front or have been included in it by British-French guarantees.

Croats Want Neutrality

Whether Macek, the Croat leader, had agreed to suspension of home rule negotiations in view of what the Government considered a threat to the existence of the whole nation was not known.

But it was pointed out that the Croats have publicly expressed their will to preserve a strict neutrality along with the Serbs, who are dominant at Belgrade, the Slovenes and other nationalities which make up Yugoslavia.

Merida Salvagers Get $7 for Their $100,000 Stake

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 9 (AP).—An Italian expedition that has spent more than $100,000 in an effort to retrieve the "treasure" of the sunken steamer Merida came to port today with a lone silver bar worth $7.20.

It was found in the baggage room of the Merida, which lies at the bottom of the Atlantic 65 miles off the Virginia Capes, where it went down May 12, 1911, after a collision with the United States fruit steamer Admiral Farragut. Members of the party said the search showed nothing else of value, but that they hadn't given up hope.

Reports that the vessel carried 17 tons of silver, valued at $250,000, have brought repeated efforts to find the lost cargo, and the Italian expedition, headed by Dr. Mario Silvestri, aboard the salvage ship Falco, has been at work two years.

Italy Forbids Moving to Town

Rome, Aug. 9 (AP).—The government today adopted a stringent measure to compel rural Italians to remain in rural areas.

A law published in the official gazette provided for fines up to 1,000 lire ($50).

Board of Six Named To Gear U. S. Industry Against War Needs

GIFFORD MOULTON COMPTON STETTINIUS

Stettinius Heads Committee to Give Military Advice on Mobilizing Resources

Preparations for industrial mobilization were thrown into high gear yesterday with the naming of six leaders of commerce and industry to form a War Resources Board.

Jointly announcing establishment of the agency, the War and Navy departments denied that its formation indicated an expectation by the Federal Government that the United States would be involved in war.

The move, officials of both departments declared, was in strict accord with recent military and naval reforms to increase preparedness in the face of unsettled conditions abroad. They said the new organization would buttress the national defense program by providing economic control of American industry immediately upon outbreak of hostilities and avoid confusion which marked the entrance of the United States into the World War.

Stettinius Is Chief

Headed by Edward R. Stettinius, jr., chairman of the board of United States Steel Corporation, the new organization will advise the Army and Navy Munitions Board on "the mobilization of the economic resources of the country in the event of a war emergency and in reviewing and perfecting the plans already under preparation," the official announcement stated.

Other members of the War Resources Board will be Karl T. Compton, president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Walter S. Gifford, president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Co.; Harold G. Moulton, president of the Brookings Institution; John Lee Pratt, director of General Motors Corporation, and Gen. Robert E. Wood, chairman of Sears, Roebuck & Co. Col. Harry K. Rutherford, U. S. Army, was named secretary of the agency.

Commenting on the board's formation, a War Department spokesman asserted, "We want to have strategic and necessary materials ready in time of war, and we want to have all of our major industries lined up. We want, for example, to have a toy manufacturer able to transform his plant for the fabrication of fuses on short notice.

Industry Catalogued

"All industry in the nation, which might prove employable in wartime, has been fully inspected and catalogued. This board is just another step in the program."

The new "expert agency" was decided upon, it was explained, not in anticipation of a conflict but "in realization of the responsibility of the Government" in periods of international uncertainty.

Naval authorities said Acting Secretary of the Navy Charles Edison and Acting Secretary of War Louis Johnson had conferred for weeks before deciding upon the agency.

Meanwhile, efforts to speed the armaments program and provide additional basing facilities on the Pacific Coast were being pushed forward.

Acting Secretary Johnson predicted an Army Air Force of 5,500 planes within two years. He said the plane-buying program would be pushed despite Congress' failure to enact legislation giving the War Department wider power in the purchase of more than 2,000 military aircraft.

Bill Blocked in House

The measure was designed to spread the largest American aircraft orders in peacetime among large and small plants, officials explained. Although approved by the Senate, the bill was blocked in the House by a single objection.

The program for equipping the entire Pacific Coast as an operating base for the expanding Navy will be studied first-hand by the full membership of the House Naval

Party's Youth May Condemn Hatch Act

'Solid Front' Predicted; Buying Young Democrat Presidency Charged

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Aug. 9.—The Nation's organized Young Democrats made ready today for their fourth annual convention tomorrow to the accompaniment of forecasts of a "solid front" against the Hatch political practices act and charges and denials the presidency of the organization was being "bought."

More than 2,000 members of the Young Democratic clubs, ranging in age from 18 to 39, had registered tonight for the three-day meeting.

Officials expected this to grow to 10,000 by tomorrow night when the convention hears the keynote speech of Senator Pepper, of Florida, New Dealer.

Hatch Answers Maner

President Pitt Tyson Maner, of Montgomery, Ala., said he had not found a single delegate "who is for the Hatch Act" banning political activities by most Federal workers. Other officers looked for a "solid front" against it to be expressed by resolution.

Maner stood on his previous statement calling the act "un-American" when asked to comment on a statement in Washington by its author, Senator Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, saying the Young Democrat's charge was based either on "complete ignorance of or total lack of sympathy with the principles for which our party has stood since its inception."

Hatch was invited several weeks ago to speak before the convention here, but declined, Maner said.

Election "Purchase" Charged

Other resolutions were expected to urge continuance of New Deal essentials for the 1940 campaign without mentioning candidates. The organization's constitution prohibits indorsement of a Presidential candidate before he is nominated.

While Maner was predicting a "harmonious convention," pre-convention fireworks were set off by Harry Shank, Columbus, Ohio, one of four candidates for president of the Young Democrats.

Shank charged the Illinois and New York delegations had spent $10,000 to "buy" the election for Homer Mat Adams, 28-year-old Illinois State official, believed by most officers to have the best chance for the presidency.

Accusation Called "Bunk"

"That's bunk," was Adams' reply. He explained that the organization's constitution allots one vote to each State turning in $100 in membership dues, at 10 cents per member.

He said Illinois had 50 votes because Young Democrats had been extremely active in that State in organizing dues-paying clubs. He added he did not know who the New York delegation, which has the largest vote, 55, would support.

Pennsylvania delegates were campaigning tonight for a revision of the rule basing votes on dues

Roosevelt Orders Savings In Government

Budget Bureau Will Hold Back Suggested Sums for Emergency

By Robert C. Albright

President Roosevelt yesterday called on department and bureau officials for "substantial savings" in 1940 expenditures and the Budget Bureau prepared to withhold sums from each agency's apportioned funds.

The President set no arbitrary economy figure in his letter to Government officials, but said he believed important savings in cost of Government could be effected through administrative improvements.

Citing estimated economies from his two recent general reorganization orders, he said:

Deductions Planned

The order, which came as the Government was operating at peak personnel loads, implemented by the highest peacetime Congressional appropriations, followed studies already opened by the Budget Bureau to standardize procedures, cut down red tape and promote efficiency.

At the Budget Bureau it was said that each agency's estimated economies would be deducted from the monthly amounts apportioned the bureaus and held in reserve for emergency or ultimate return to the Treasury. Within each apportionment departments will maintain departmental reserves for a similar purpose.

The letter, released by Budget Director Harold D. Smith, was regarded as the President's answer to unsuccessful Congressional efforts to cut appropriations horizontally 10 per cent.

Inconsistency Denied

Officials denied that it conflicted with the President's general spend-for-recovery theories, pointing to his remonstrances that Congress spend within the budget, to his frequent requests for governmental efficiencies and to similar appeals to

Prince Georges County police last night were searching for a Washington cab driver whom a 27-year-old Treasury employe accused of beating and robbing her of $1.75 in a woods near Columbia Park, Md.

3,000 Brave Showers to Hear Ganz's 3d D. C. Concert in Rain

By John Chabot Smith.

Several thousand people were frightened away from the Watergate by a sudden storm last night and thereby missed one of the most charming concerts of the season.

Less than 3,000 music lovers braved the showers to hear Millard Taylor and the National Symphony Orchestra, under the masterly baton of Rudolph Ganz, play a program of romantic music with a verve and brilliance worthy of a record crowd.

During the shower before the concert started, the musicians calmly tuned their instruments backstage and went over the difficult bits, while Conductor Ganz jerked his eyebrows and passed off his worries with jokes.

"I've done it again," he said, referring to his two previous rainy appearances at the Watergate. "You know, they call me the water-child because I was born in February, under the sign of the water-bearer (Aquarius). They say when I play the music is liquid, but it seems to be liquid in the wrong place!" he laughed, pointing to the wet sky.

A half hour before the concert was due to start, while the seats were already filling up, the heavens opened. Some left at once, some

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

IT SEEMS LIKE A DREAM

What a Congress, what a session, what a bunch of statesmen! What leadership, what followers! . . . Will the historians say that they saved the Republic?

Harlan Miller

The curling, conservative lip of Senator Bridges, the exasperated sorties of Senator Minton with his crusader's frown; they are the Hector and the Ajax of the drama.

This is a hymn of praise, a dirge of lamentation for the Senate and the House, for the shrill righteousness of Representative Halleck and the sputtering indignation of Adolph Sabath. It all seems like a dream now.

What a House!

What shenanigans in the secrecy of the committees, what riots and mob scenes on the floor! What heroic demands for 45-minute roll calls, what evaporating quorums!

The pale brow of Woodrum is o'ercast with thought as he keeps one heavy finger on the scales. What darkling whispers by Joe Martin as he rallies the minority!

• • • •

What a triumphant minority, what an abject majority! What wary straddlers lurking behind the rail, poised for flight if a record vote threatens! How honest Rayburn is undone and again undone by the majority he leads! How 169 with fannies in their seats can outvote 260 truants!

"—the triumphant minority"

O sages of the Senate, of thee I sing! Of Barkley's smouldering patience and the dogged persiflage of Taft; of Borah's tolerant upturned lip as he peeps in from the cloakroom to reconnoiter, ready for flight if the wrong speaker stands up; of 60 Senators who try to behave as if they were merely innocent bystanders, eager not to get hurt.

• • • •

Eighteen months ago this column asserted boldly that there weren't a dozen genuine New Dealers in the Senate, and no more than 40 real Roosevelteans in the House. . . . Maybe I was exaggerating a little. The 1938 election shriveled even these bitter-enders. Congress showed the President who's really boss in the U. S. A.

• • • •

An illustration of what happened to even these few New Dealers is handsome Congessman Bob Allen, of Pennsylvania. Early in 1938 he was one of the sponsors of a sort of "industrial recovery" bill which would have cost five or ten billions to finance . . . Last week he voted against considering the lend-spend bill.

"—the abject majority"

Surely this Congess has demonstrated amply, to the satisfaction of the most timid soul, that this Republic is overwhelmingly conservative. Perhaps we will try anything once. Flogged by adversity, we may try a few experiments, noble or otherwise.

But on the morning after, Congress, an accurate cross-section, demonstrates that we are as penitent as a man with a headache who is ready to take the pledge and usually blames everything on the cheese he ate.

In such a burst of repentance, a man is apt to pour down the drain everything that looks like strong drink. That was the mood of Congress the last few weeks. But who ever thought it was a rubber stamp Congress dominated by New Dealers?

This was a session that will be remembered (a little while, at least) because it did so many good things from questionable motives, and so many questionable things from the best of motives.

• • • •

What a Congress! The aloof, alert Lodge, unscarred and concealing his amusement; the vigilant Vandenburg, ever ready to pick up a Democratic fumble; Alva Adams, the gesticulating little giant from Colorado; the ineffable McNary, sitting on the lid . . . In the chaotic, roundabout, back-handed way that God performs his miracles with strange tools, maybe it saved the Republic from democracy.

What defiance of the President! How those babies can defy!

Or will the historians say that it merely blocked a trend for a little while? Anyhow, they should award themselves a flock of medals, and undoubtedly will.

Monopoly Inquiry Charts Policy Today

Expected to Arrange Hearings on Oil and Industrial Insurance

Chairman Joseph C. O'Mahoney yesterday called a policy meeting of the Temporary National Economic Committee today, to chart future monopoly hearings and to point the sweeping study toward a final report this winter.

The committee is expected to give the go-ahead signal for hearings on its study of industrial insurance, fix a date for open hearings on oil industry practices, and discuss other loose-end subjects under scrutiny, including the SEC investigation of investment banking.

Senator O'Mahoney, armed with $510,000 in additional appropriations voted by Congress, said he hoped to bring the study of monopoly practices to conclusion in January or February, and submit final recommendations to the next Congress.

Urges Factual Viewpoint

What those recommendations will be, the committee failed to indicate in its preliminary report, but it said:

"The committee is of the opinion that the sooner the widespread existence of monopolistic practices in commerce is recognized and acknowledged, the sooner the country can get down to the business of determining what to do about it. While there may be differences of opinion as to the solution, there is no point in disputing the fact."

Four limited recommendations already have been laid before Congress, calling for modification of patent law procedure, prohibition on use of patents for trade restrictions, amendment of the Clayton act to prohibit one corporation from acquiring the assets as well as the stock of a competing corporation, and civil remedies for the enforcement of antitrust laws

Congress approved only five minor reforms in the patent laws, largely designed to expedite patent procedure and prevent abuses of the patent privilege. Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, one of the committee's three Senate members, is expected to file a dissent from the preliminary patent recommendations.

The committee's over-all study of the oil industry was apparently ready for presentation immediately following industrial insurance hearings. Questionnaires have been answerved and statements prepared by the oil industry's spokesmen, large and small. In the coming oil hearings, the committee will deviate somewhat from former procedure in letting the industry itself tell all the story, from divergent viewpoints.

Steel May Be Studied

O'Mahoney would not indicate whether the committee plans a study of the steel industry, but that question conceivably may come up today.

The Wyoming Senator believes the group already has established that the investigation is not "a witch hunt," as first alleged. He voiced belief that the study will continue without rancor and without controversy, with the essential facts developed by finance and management, by its critics and by interested Government departments.

O'Mahoney plans to return to Wyoming this week-end, but will be back in Washington for reopening of committee hearings probably late this month or early in September.

Armour Rehires 15 And Averts Strike

Chicago, Aug. 9 (INS).—On the verge of a threatened Nation-wide strike in the meat-packing industry, announcement was made late today that Armour & Co. had yielded to union demands and rehired 15 dismissed union workers.

Only a few hours before Don Harris, director of the C. I. O. Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, declared there was "little hope" of avoiding a Nation-wide strike. Then, after Mayor Edward J. Kelly had been called in to use his offices in preventing the walkout, the union announced the company had yielded.

Peg, Tommy, Capitol's Ancient Subway Team, Seek Museum Pastures in Auction Wednesday

Unique Jalopies Have Been Gathering Dust For Years; They Thrilled Thousands Before 1912, When Monorails Were Installed

In 1909 they were the hot stuff of Capitol Hill, but this is another day, and so the two outmoded Senate subway cars which hauled such prewar luminaries as "Uncle Joe" Cannon, the elder La Follette and Boies Penrose are up for auction.

David Lynn, Architect of the Capitol, yesterday invited antiquarians, fanciers on ancient vintage motor vehicles and museum people to attend the auction, scheduled for 2 p. m. Wednesday, in the Senate Office Building subway shops, where "Peg" and "Tommy" have been gathering dust for years.

"It'll be a pity to see them go," said Lynn.

Hundreds of Capitol Hill employes, as well as the members of Congress who ride the Senate subway, undoubtedly feel the same way about it as the architect. The canary-colored carriers haven't been used since 1912, but they are a friendly, nostalgic landmark to the hundreds of folk who walk past them daily, when Congress is in session, as they board or leave the modern monorail cars.

"Peg" and "Tommy" were designed especially for the Senate subway by the Studebaker company. Their electric storage batteries which gave them their power are long since dead.

Each has a capacity of eight passengers and driver. They thrilled thousands of Capitol visitors before 1912, when the monorail system was installed. The new-fangled trolley wagon shunted "Peg" and "Tommy" into the background, though they were used during rush hours for three or four years.

In 1916 the cars now in use were built at the Washington Navy Yard and placed in operation. From that time on the old Studebakers had no function but to gather dust and curious glances.

Now they are to be knocked down under the auctioneer's hammer. The luscious carriage of 1909, without a ride in which no visit to the Capitol was complete, is the unique jalopy of 1939.

Sic transit gloria!

Library Gifts RoutedDirectly To New York

Allen Acts to Dispel Fear of Compulsion to Aid Roosevelt Project

Municipal employes desiring to contribute toward the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library at Hyde Park yesterday were instructed to send all contributions direct to the New York headquarters by Commissioner Allen, local drive leader.

In a joint statement with Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal, who is assisting in the campaign to raise $350,000, Commissioner Allen told District department heads to send all contributions to the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, Inc., at 1600 Broadway, N. Y.

He said the directions were given to dispel any fear on the part of District employes that failure to contribute to the fund would result in "punishment" by the department heads.

Commissioner Allen today is scheduled to meet with President Roosevelt and Keith Morgan, chairman of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, to discuss next year's birthday ball celebration. The meeting will take place at Hyde Park.

After the meeting, Commissioner Allen will leave for a two-week cruise.

Morgenthau Confined To Bed in Denmark

Copenhagen, Aug. 9 (AP).—Henry Morgenthau, jr., United States Secretary of the Treasury, was confined to bed in the Elsinore summer hotel here today with a headache and slight stomach disorder.

A. T. & T. Offers Reduced Rates On Long Lines

Carrying estimated savings of $1,060,000 annually to subscribers, a new set of tariffs has been submitted by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. for "long lines" communication, the Federal Communications Commission announced yesterday.

The schedule, which would affect private lines and Morse service, substitutes airline measurements for railroad distances in computation of rates, and reduces station equipment charges.

In press and Government news service the new rates will eliminate the "turning points" in connection with interchange channel rates, and reduce teletypewriter equipment rates, the commission stated.

N.B.C. Apologizes For WPA Charge Against Tydings

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—The National Broadcasting Company broadcast an apology to Senator Milliard E. Tydings (Democrat) of Maryland, last night for an assertion made on a program July 25 that WPA funds had been used to build a private road and a yacht basin on his estate.

The apology said that Bob Allen, newspaper columnist, had made the assertions in an NBC program.

It said Tydings had told the cmopany the statement was "entirely without foundation in fact," and Col. F. C. Harrington, WPA Commissioner had advised it an investigation "failed to substantiate the allegations."

Alsberg Lays His Dismissal To 'Difference'

He Had No Quarrel With Harrington, Says WPA Writers' Chief

Henry G. Alsberg declared yesterday that his services as national director of the Federal Writers Project had been terminated following a disagreement with Col. F. C. Harrington, Works Project Commission, who insisted that the project was not being well administered.

Harrington had demanded that he resign, Alsberg said. He refused to resign at this time, however, on the ground that "I would be accused of leaving the project when it was undergoing reorganization."

Harrington refused to comment. John D. Newsom, previously director of the writers' project in Michigan, was appointed as Alsberg's successor, and took charge yesterday.

Resignation Asked in June

Alsberg said Harrington had told him in June that the project was not being well administered, and had asked for his resignation. He replied, he said, that the State guide books ought to be out and the project in shape for him to leave it about August 1. Therefore, he would be "glad to resign at that time."

"Thereafter," he said, "a lot of delays ensued. It became necessary, under the new relief act, to reorganize the project. Col. Harrington wanted to hold me to my promise to resign on August 1. I told him I thought I ought to see the project over the rough spots of the reorganization period.

"He could not see it that way. As a result, he terminated my services.

"There was no quarrel at all. It was just a small difference of opinion."

Says He Asked Examples

When Harrington previously has said the project was not being well administered, Alsberg declared, "I asked him to cite specific examples." He added:

"Col. Harrington did not do that. Maybe he wanted to spare my feelings."

Alsberg declared he told Col. Harrington it ought to be possible to reorganize the project and get the guide books out by the end of September.

Under the new relief act, only work sponsored in the various States can be handled in the project. As a result, efforts are being made to round up sponsors in the States to keep the project going.

Oil Peace Foreseen As Result of Revolt Threat in Mexico

William Roy Vallance, assistant legal adviser of the State Department, yesterday predicted that the current dispute over expropriated American oil properties in Mexico would be settled amicably within a year.

In an interview after a speech at the Federal Bar Association luncheon yesterday, Vallance cited reports that a revolution threatens the Cardenas government as one reason for a rapid settlement.

Vallance, who was chairman of the section on comparative international law at the recent American Bar Association convention in San Francisco, introduced a resolution on the floor of the convention proposing that the oil dispute be submitted to immediate arbitration. He said yesterday that he was certain the resolution would have passed had it not become ensnared in a parliamentary tangle.

On Capitol Hill

Garner Names Walsh, Glass and Holman To Lead Anthem's Anniversary Fete

In a telegram from his home in Uvalde, Tex., to Secretary of the Senate Halsey, Vice President Garner yesterday named Senators

Sen. Holman

Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts; Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, and Holman (Republican), of Oregon, to participate in the celebration of the 125th anniversary of the writing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" by Francis Scott Key.

Other members of the commission who will celebrate the writing of the national anthem at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, on September 14, include President Roosevelt, Speaker of the House Bankhead, the Maryland Congressional delegation, the Governor of Maryland and the Mayor of Baltimore.

An eight-pound baby boy was born yesterday to Representative and Mrs. William B. Barry (Democrat), of New York. They also are the parents of a 17-month-old girl.

Additional Congressional departures yesterday included:

Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, left by automobile today for his home in Omaha. He said he would open an office there for use during the recess.

Senator and Mrs. D. Worth Clark, of Idaho, left for New York City to embark on a two-week cruise to Haiti and the Panama Canal. The Senator said he would return to Washington for ten days and then go to Idaho for a brief visit.

Senator Herring (Democrat), of Iowa, and his office staff were en route to Des Moines, where an office will be maintained during the recess.

A delegation of 28 members of the Florida Young Democratic Club visited Senators Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, and Andrews (Democrat), of Florida, at the Capitol on their way to the Young Democrats convention in Pittsburgh.

Wearing orange-colored hats and carrying canes of similar hue, the Floridians included a group wearing typical Seminole Indian garb.

President Signs 38 Measures And Vetoes 9

Approves Modification Of Pay Act Affecting Phone Exchanges

By the United Press.

Hyde Park, Aug. 9.—President Roosevelt today signed 38 measures sent to him by the Congress and vetoed 9, enacting into law two bills effecting minor modifications in the wage-hour law and providing machinery for effectuating programs outlined by Pan-American conferences at Buenos Aires and Lima, Peru.

After accusing Congressional factions of gambling with the future of 1,500,000,000 humans and the fate of American business, Mr. Roosevelt worked steadily on bills still awaiting effective action. He cut the number of pending measures to 108; but he still must act on social security amendments carrying tax economies of $905,000,000 for the next three years and the final deficiency bill which provides $119,000,000 to enable the Commodity Credit Corporation to continue its operations in support of prices of farm commodities.

Despite months of Congressional bickering over proposed revisions in the wage-hour law, Congress sent to Mr. Roosevelt only one minor bill affecting the act. Seated in the small study at his family estate, he signed the act which exempts operators of telephone exchanges serving less than 500 subscribers.

Regulates Commerce in Seeds

Mr. Roosevelt also signed a bill authorizing him to render closer and more effective relationships of Government departments and agencies and by creating advisory committees to carry out the programs outlined by the Buenos Aires Pan-American Conference of 1936 and the Lima Conference of 1938.

Most of the measures on which Mr. Roosevelt acted today were minor. Measures which he signed would:

Regulate interstate and foreign commerce in seeds and setting fixed standards for imported seeds.

Provide for confiscation of vessels, vehicles and aircraft used in transportation of narcotics, firearms and counterfeit coins.

Provide for an assistant to the United States surgeon general.

Establish a Benjamin Harrison Commission to plan a memorial for Harrison, twenty-third President.

Simplify procedure in paying fees for patents.

Give railroad mail clerks an Armistice Day holiday.

Authorize the Agriculture Department to outline long-term plans for eradication of the pink boll worm.

Vetoes Many Personal Bills

Most of the measures which Mr. Roosevelt vetoed were personal relief bills.

They include one providing for maintenance of a highway in the Shenandoa National Forest, which Mr. Roosevelt said "would encourage local communities to request the opening of minor roads in national parks areas solely for the purpose of conferring local benefits on adjacent communities."

Army Plane Collision Kills Two

LIEUT. MORRIS THOMAS LIEUT. W. M. PRINCE

A spectacular collision 2,000 feet in the air sent one of the two U. S. Army observation planes en route to forthcoming war maneuvers in New York State plummeting into a clump of trees near Round Lake, N. Y., yesterday. Lieut. Thomas, pilot, was killed, as was an enlisted man, when his plane crashed. Pilot of the other ship was Lieut. Prince, commanding the flight. The planes sideswiped in midair. Lieut. Prince landed his disabled plane and was uninjured

Summer School To Open August 14

Problems of democracy, consumers' co-operatives and social action will be discussed by youth leaders attending the Washington Summer School of Catholic Action at the Mayflower August 14-19.

A course in democracy and a digest of political science will be offered by the Rev. Edward Dowling, S. J. of St. Louis, known for his work on Catholic political problems.

The Rev. George A. McDonald, S. J., known as an authority on co-operatives, will give courses.

The faculty, headed by the Rev. Daniel A. Lord, S. J., will offer five regular courses and 25 elective courses with a range of subjects, including Sodality union organization, Catholic literature, parliamentary law, recreational leadership.

The Washington Sodality Union and the Students Sodality Union will be hosts to the school, which is sponsored by the national organization of the Sodality of Our Lady, with headquarters in St. Louis.

Ohio Tong War Leaves D. C. Chinese Cold; 'Murdering Is Not Our Business'

Chinatown, D. C., civic leaders, momentarily disturbed yesterday by reports of torture chambers and tong murders in a news story from Cleveland, checked the reports at once by long-distance telephone, drew a sharp distinction between "personal business" and tong affairs, and returned to Oriental passivity.

Coatless in the cool shade of his curio shop at 620 H street northwest, F. S. Moy, president of the On Leong Chinese Merchants Association of Washington, explained the situation in detail.

"If someone is murdering someone in Cleveland," he said in effect, Leongs have nothing to do with this personal business. The On Leongs are collecting money always for the refugees in China; that is our business. But our government in China is paying for the armies; that is their business. We in the United States do nothing with that."

"We had a convention in Detroit last April, all the On Leongs, told everybody to give what money he could, 25 cents or what he had, for the refugees, and the sick people," he continued. "Come, you will see."

He led the way through the spotlessly clean shop, between shelves lined with caballistically labeled tea packages, and glass cabinets displaying silk robes and carved ivory Buddhas, to a little bare room behind. On the wall was a panoramic photograph of America's leading Chinese business men, lined up on either side of Bishop Paul Yu-Pin, on Nanking, in Detroit's Chinatown.

Across the road at No. 607 Moy pointed out the headquarters of the Chinese National Salvation Association, where contributions are received and audited every Wednesday night. Large placards on the window, covered with intricate pothooks, curves and bars that sprawled like dragon-tails from top to bottom, informed Chinese passers-by of the nature and importance of the society.

Inside a table was prepared, with pencils and a vase of irises, for the evening's session. Pictures of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, leader of the Chinese forces, and Sun Yat-Sen, father of the Chinese revolution, looked down from beneath crossed American and Chinese flags. A war map of China, covered with neatly squared off Chinese characters, was half hidden, not by pin-flags, but by notices of the progress of collections throughout America.

"And we are doing pretty good in Washington," said Moy, his little dark eyes sparkling in his large round face. "I don't know how much we've sent the refugees, but it's a lot."

Gov. Stark Willing To Run for Senate

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—Gov. Lloyd C. Stark of Missouri said today he would be a candidate for the United States Senate next year "if the people of Missouri want me."

He predicted that the political machine of Tom Prendergast, former Democratic boss of Kansas City, would have little effect on the outcome of the 1940 election in Missouri, when all State officers are to be elected. Prendegast is serving a sentence in Leavenworth for income tax evasion

The Governor said emphatically he would not support the present Senator from Missouri, Harry S. Truman, in the coming campaign.

Naval Academy Needs Space, Board Reports

Roosevelt Urged to Have Certain Tests For Entrance Dropped

Additional land must be obtained at the Naval Academy "to provide for an inevitable expansion . . . should war come," and to give adequate space for midshipman sports, the Academy's board of visitors yesterday wrote President Roosevelt.

The board's report said physical education and exercise at Annapolis were hampered by lack of space and declared that in time of war midshipmen would have to be housed in barracks erected on the sports grounds, "which would be more than ever needed for precisely the purposes for which they are now used.'

"The crowded condition of the academy," the board stated . . . "is due not only to lack of buildings but also to lack of building space . . . Any removal of the postgraduate school will make available for other purposes much needed space within the academic limits."

Commenting on administrative facilities at Annapolis, the board asserted "functions of maintenance and administration are now being carried on in cramped, and in some parts, antiquated and temporary structures."

It noted with satisfaction the improvements being made on the mess hall, to remedy "the unfortunate conditions that have long existed with respect to noise, light, and ventilation."

Among the academic recommendations were the elimination of certain entrance examination subjects, such as ancient history, and standardization of requirements for admission to the academy.

"Conditioning of the fourth entering class during its first summer would be more effective," the board said, "if all fourth classmen were on the ground by July 1 of their entering year."

Members of the board were Senators Walsh, of Massachusetts; Neely, of West Virginia; White, of Maine, and Lodge, of Massachusetts; Representatives Fernandez, of Ohio; Maas, of Minnesota; Allen, of Illinois, and Darden, of Virginia; also Dr. L. M. Brittain, president of the Georgia School of Technology; Prof. A. G. Christie, of Johns Hopkins University; Dr. H. N. Davis, president of the Stevens Institute of Technology; Dr. Edmund E. Day, president of Cornell University; Dr. F. P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, and the Rev. John F. O'Hara, president of Notre Dame University. Lieut. Comdrs. Duncan Curry and Robert E. Jasperson were secretaries to the board.

10 Grams of Radium Tested Here to Go Throughout U. S.

75 Pounds of Containers Protect Human Lives and Films From Tiny Fraction of An Ounce; Element to Aid Cancer Sufferers

By Gerald G. Gross

Cancer sufferers in Bangor and Honolulu, Seattle and Miami, will begin drawing benefits within a few weeks from the nearly 10 grams of radium which is in the final stages of testing at the National Bureau of Standards.

Dr. L. F. Curtiss, head of the bureau's radium laboratories, yesterday declared that the first shipments under the national cancer act will be made "within a month" to hospitals and research centers scattered throughout the country.

The lead containers in which the miracle element will be shipped by express—it is tabooed by the Post-office Department, due to the damaging effect on films—are a story in themselves.

75 Pounds of Containers

They come in three sizes and may be telescoped together. The largest is about the size of a big cantaloupe and the smallest may be compared to a grapefruit in shape and bulk. Together they weigh about 75 pounds.

The three containers, used as a single unit, will accommodate a maximum of 100 milligrams of radium— a tiny fraction of an ounce. The glass tube holding the radium will have, packed thus, a 2½-inch thickness of lead surrounding it.

If more than 100 milligrams is to be shipped, the thickness must be greater in proportion. A hundred "mg," however, is a larger order and it is believed the three sizes of containers will be adequate, at least for the time being.

Even the full 2½-inch lead overcoat is protective only for 85 hours. If the 100-milligram consignment is to be in transit longer than that, a thicker wrapper must be provided for human safety and to guard against damage to films which might be traveling in the same car or hold.

Take All Precautions

The lead containers themselves will be packed in wooden crates, labeled profusely with warnings and handling instructions.

Dr. Curtiss and members of his laboratory staff seem, to the onlooker, to go about their potentially dangerous duties in a casual manner, but actually they are taking every known precaution as they work with the mineral.

Some biologists advance the possibility, based upon animal experiments, that third and fourth generation descendants of persons who work with radium may be penalized in the form of hereditary eccentricities, even though the handlers themselves might not be affected in any way.

"Who knows,' laughed Dr. Curtiss, "may be some of our great-grandchildren will be born with six fingers."

Since the discovery of radium is comparatively recent, only time will tell whether the theory is sound.

Funeral Here Tomorrow for J. E. Gillespie

Arlington Burial for Commercial Attache Who Died in Istanbul

Funeral services for Julian E. Gillespie, commercial attache at Istanbul for many years, who died at his post on June 23, will be held at 2:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon at Fort Myer Chapel. Burial will be in Arlington National Cemtery.

The services will be conducted by Dr. Little, of Charlotte, N. C., a friend of the Gillespie family. Fletcher Rawls, acting director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, will attend the services as a representative of the Secretary of Commerce.

A native of Dallas, Tex., Mr. Gillespie attended the University of Texas and took a postgraduate course at Georgetown University in 1915. He received his foreign service appointment on May 26, 1920, and had been in Turkey since that time. Formerly, he had been a captain in the Army, serving for three years in the A. E. F.

Honorary Pallbearers

The honorary pallbearers will include: Mehmet Munir Ertegun, the Turkish Ambassador; Senators Morris Sheppard and Tom Connally, Representative Hatton W. Sumners, Ambassador to Japan Joseph Grew, G. Mrs. Cummings Dies Here at 40

Her Parties Were Famous

On April 2, 1929, she was married to Cummings at Stamford, Conn., where he then practiced law. She was the third wife of the then 58-year-old lawyer and Democratic leader.

Upon his appointment to the New Deal Cabinet, she became one of the most popular hostesses in official Washington, limiting her dinner parties to 12 guests and including among them New Dealers, old dealers, artists, authors, actors and preachers. Her dinners were noted for their fierce friendly debates and their brilliant conversation.

An omnivorous reader, she scorned "headline readers" and set aside several hours daily to digest her newspapers and keep up with her books. She was much interested in the Justice Department and supplied her busy husband with reviews and critiques of current literature, both pertinent to his work and purely entertaining.

Literature shared her affections with music and stage, and she traveled extensively here and abroad with her husband. She was especially interested in Wagnerian opera.

Presented at British Court

Presented at the British court at coronation time, she wore, with the Lord Chamberlain's permission, a red gown trimmed in silver bamboo leaves. Her hats were always rakish and a source of amusement to her.

Short of stature, with a round, pleasant face, she wore her black hair cropped in a fringe of bangs across her forehead.

Mrs. Cummings was an ardent Democrat but took no active part in politics. "We've got one orator in the family," she said. "They'd plow me under if I started making speeches."

Funeral services will be held at the home tomorrow at 5 p. m. Burial will be in Woodland Cemetery, Stamford, Conn., Saturday at 1:45 p. m.

Bandits Masked In Gray Stockings Rob Liquor Store

Two white men wearing women's grey stockings over their heads last night held up a liquor and delicatessen store at 1423 Good Hope road southeast and escaped with an undetermined amout of money. Their stocking masks, without eyeholes, completely veiled their faces.

Lewis B. Gerdason, proprietor of the store, and Robert Cornelius, his assistant, who were forced to lie on the floor while the bandits rifled a cash register, said a second register was overlooked. They said a woman waited outside in a black coupe in which the men escaped.

At the same time, Ninth Precinct police said Precinct Detective E. E. Scott captured a 26-year-old colored man in connection with the assault and robbery Saturday of John Yeps, 32, in his laundry at 806 Fourth street northeast. Yeps was treated at Casualty Hospital for scalp injuries.

Lungs Paralyzed, Young D. C. Wife Dies in Respirator

A 23-year-old wife lost a battle with death last night after her lungs were paralyzed and she was given artificial respiration for more than three hours.

The woman, Mrs. Margaret Greene, 23, of 2112 F street northwest, was first taken to Providence Hospital, where it was decided to transfer her to an "iron lung" in Gallinger Hospital. Three members of the Fire Department's No. 1 rescue squad, headed by Sergt. Ralph Raynes, applied artificial respiration and fed oxygen to the patient in order to keep her breathing until she could be placed into the respirator.

She died, however, a few hours later in Gallinger Hospital. An autopsy will be performed today. Mrs. Green was the wife of Private Willard Greene, with the Marine Corps here.

Geo. E. Thompson Funeral Today

Funeral for George Edward Thompson, 51, a mail carrier for 21 years, who died Tuesday at his home, 910 C street southeast, will be held at 2 o'clock this afternoon at the Grace Baptist Church. Burial will be in Prospect Hill Cemetery.

Mr. Thompson was born in Washington, son of the late Freeman G. Thompson and Mrs. Emma J. Thompson. Surviving besides his mother, are his widow, Mrs. Ruby M. Thompson; a son, Grant C. Thompson, and two sisters, Mrs. William Jenkins, of Washington, and Mrs. Arthur Jewett, of Arlington County.

Foreign Trade Of Germany Gains

Berlin, Aug. 9 (AP).—The German government today reported an improvement in foreign trade during the second quarter of 1939 compared with the same period last year.

This year's figures, which furnished the first comparative totals since the acquisition of Bohemia-Moravia and Memel, showed an export surplus of 174,400,000 marks ($69,760,000). Imports amounted to 1,285,500,000 marks ($514,200,000) while exports ran up to 1,459,900,000 marks ($583,960,000).

Imports were $78,000,000 lower than in the second quarter of 1938. Exports were $365,816,000 higher.

Nearly 75 per cent of the decline of imports resulted from curtailment of purchases in the United States.

Murphy Frowns On Candidacy by Attorneys General

Attorney General Murphy not only is not a candidate for President; he said yesterday there ought to be a law forbidding the Attorney General to run for public office until he had been out of the Cabinet some time.

Murphy was addressing Department officials and employes attending the administration of the oath of office to Matthew F. McGuire, recently named Special Assistant Attorney General—a post recently created.

Ciano Reported On Way to Talk About Danzig

Forster Will Speak Tonight in Answer To Polish 'Threat'

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Aug. 9.—A high Italian cabinet member, presumably Foreign Minister Count Ciano, Premier Mussolini's son-in-law, is expected to come to Germany soon to confer with Nazi leaders on the Danzig question, a reliable source revealed today.

Even Mussolini might come, one informant said, but this was considered less likely than a hurried trip by Ciano to see German Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop at the latter's summer home near Salzburg.

Official sources here have been advised Hitler is working on a settlement of the Danzig dispute and before a final draft is made, they say, Hitler will want Italian comment on it.

Forster to Answer Poles

Free City of Danzig, Aug. 9 (AP).—Nazis spread the word tonight that their party leader, Albert Forster, fresh from a visit with Fuehrer Hitler in Berchtesgaden, would give the answer tomorrow night to what one spokesman termed "the unbelievable threat of Poles to shoot Danzig down with cannon."

Party spokesmen predicted at least 30,000 persons would hear Forster at a mass meeting which was arranged suddenly with announcement of his return tonight.

Nazi charges of Polish "threats" grew out of this sentence in the Polish newspaper Czas: "The guns of the Polish army are facing Danzig, should authorities of the Free City not abandon in time the dangerous road they are following on orders from outside.")

Papers Attack "Insane Poles"

Free City newspapers continued attacks on "the fantasies of the insane Poles" in comment similar to that of the official Danziger Vospost-en, which said:

"The unbearable Polish lust for conquest, which is beginning gradually to degenerate into political kleptomania, increases evermore under well-wishing indulgence in London and Paris . . ."

Temporary relaxation of tension after the Danzig Senate agreed to negotiate with Poland on customs control problems was wiped out by Forster's return from the meeting with Hitler and the vigorous anti-Polish press campaign.

Nazi political quarters understood Hitler intended to hold another conference soon with Danzing leaders and that Dr. Arthur K. Greiser, president of the Danzig Senate, might accompany Forster to the next meeting.

German Reported Shot

Warsaw, Aug. 9 (AP).—The Polish Telegraphic Agency tonight reported a Polish frontier guard shot at and apparently wounded one of three German soldiers who crossed the frontier into the Kartuzy district of the Polish Corridor.

The Agency said the incident took place near the village of Kamienis Sunday evening.

The story said a patrol of three Germans with full military equipment crossed the frontier, and the guard ordered them to halt. When this warning and a shot in the air were ignored he took aim. The trio darted back into German territory, the guard said, and the one who presumably was wounded was put into a military car and driven away.

(A German version of the shooting, which was published Monday, said a Polish soldier crossed the frontier and wounded a German soldier on German soil.)

Poland's preparedness for a possible "new period of crisis" in Europe late this month was indicated today by reports that no leaves of absence would be granted in the Polish army after August 15. The orders were said to forbid even short leaves of a maximum of two weeks which had been granted to non-commissioned and career officers earlier this summer.

They Want to Fade Out of the Picture

Dixie Davis, "mouthpiece" of the Dutch Schultz mob, who turned Federal witness for Tom Dewey, New York's "racket busting" district attorney, posed for the press yesterday with his bride of three days, the former show girl, Hope Dare, for the first time since their wedding, guarded by Dewey men. ing company clerk and law student, was reported to have spurned a $10,000 offer by a Manila sportsman to take the baby to the New York World's Fair by clipper plane. He did, however, sell postal card rights to a photographer for $50. The larger offer was turned down because of fear the trip would jeopardize the baby's life.

The mother attributed her baby's malformation to her own contemplation of a picture showing Jesus Christ with heart exposed.

The 24-year-old mother, Mrs. Esperanza Rafael, a devout Catholic, told interviewers that for three months prior to the birth she was unable to leave bed, and that while so confined she gazed constantly on two pictures on the wall, one of Christ and the other of the Virgin Mary.

Dr. Guillermo Del Castillo, who delivered the baby, was more optimistic after a careful examination this morning. He said there was no reason why the child should not live a long time.

Mayor Juan Posadas visited the hospital and told doctors to spare no efforts to save the child. The mayor said he would pay all expenses. He ordered the bureau of health to assign several nurses to the case.

"By No Means Rare"

Chicago, Aug. 9 (AP).—The American Medical Association said today that ectopia cordis, a condition in which infants are born with hearts outside their bodies, was "by no means rare."

Examination of association library works revealed that Dr. Maude Abbott, in studying 850 cases of congenital heart diseases, reported seven were those of ectopia cordis.

A physician of Clifton Springs, N. Y., reported in 1929 that an infant lived 16½ hours with its heart outside the body.

Johns Hopkins Hospital records of 1919 mentioned the case of a 15-month-old child with ectopia cordis, and in 1924 a case was reported from New York City.

The St. Louis Children's Hospital in January, 1937, had a case of a child born with its heart resting externally on the chest, the A. M. A. said. The baby died after three days.

Ex-Premier Wang Asks Chinese To Make Peace

Shanghai, Aug. 9 (AP).—A disaffected former premier of China, Wang Ching-Wei, broadcast a sweeping peace appeal to China in general and South China in particular tonight with the ostensible approval of the Japanese army command.

Speaking by radio from Japanese-occupied Canton, Wang said the Japanese were prepared to withdraw troops from China if Chinese leaders would accept their terms and avow opposition to Communism.

Meanwhile, United States authorities sought to determine the fate of Americans in Kaifeng, Sinyang and Kikungshan in Honan Province, Hwohsien in Shansi and Shihchiachwang in Hopeh.

George Reviews Reserve Fleet With Darlan

French Admiral a Guest; Fog Delays Air Defense Maneuvers

By the Associated Press

London, Aug. 9.—King George VI reviewed an impressive array of Britain's reserve fleet off Weymouth today beneath overcast skies which marred the nation's gigantic display of sea, land and air power, and forced a 24-hour postponement of London's first blackout since the World War.

The British admiralty, gearing its war machine to meet a possible autumn "emergency", in Europe, lined up 133 ships of the reserve fleet for the sailor King.

Standing alone in an open cockpit of a streamlined royal barge, King George swept through miles-long lines of trim warships, ranging from the 29,150-ton battleship Revenge to small swift torpedo boats.

French Commander Present

Near the monarch in the mahogany barge were Fleet Admiral Jean Darlan, supreme commander of French naval forces, and Lord Stanhope, first lord of the British Admiralty.

Through blinding mist and drizzling rain, the King made inspection visits to five representative ships of the fleet, which after a two-week shakedown cruise will join the mighty home fleet for the August-September preparedness period upon which Britain has embarked.

The Lord Privy Seal announced the blackout, climax of the three-day aerial maneuvers, would be carried out from midnight tomorrow until 4 a. m. Saturday, regardless of the weather.

The announcement said the delay was necessary "since widespread low clouds would make satisfactory observation impossible."

The disappearance of a five-man bomber in the North Sea, the death of four fliers in a flaming crash and a mishap to a third bomber in which four crewmen were forced to bail out added a sober note to the mammoth tests of Britain's air-raid defenses which started yesterday.

Prior to these accidents, Royal Air Force planes had been involved in 105 crashes which claimed 179 lives since January 1.

About 1,300 warplanes were engaged in the aerial exercises.

The air ministry said the "attackers," which resumed their raids after a night of imaginary combat, received a "hot reception" from "defenders" when they circled western London.

A few "enemy" raids were successful overnight because of the weather, but most of them were intercepted by fighters or theoretically brought down by antiaircraft guns.

U. S., France Sign Ocean Flight Pacts

The United States and France have signed two "arrangements" for air navigation and for the operation of transatlantic air transport services.

The agreement, the State Department said yesterday, provides that each government shall accord to the air lines of the other the right to at least two round trips a week.

In addition France grants the United States the right to additional services touching France, should that country become a partway point for American airlines which may eventually be extended to Germany, Poland and Russia.

Franco Creates Political Junta

Burgos, Spain, Aug. 9 (AP).—Ramon Serrano Suner, minister of interior and propaganda, today became chief of the political board of the Falangist Council, now an integral part of the government under Franco's reorganization to promote reconstruction of Spain.

A political junta of 19 members, appointed by Franco as supreme leader, was created in a decree which changed the administrative setup of the Falangist political council and established it as an advisory board to the government with the privilege of proposing legislation.

In another reorganization step, it was announced that Franco would be aided by at least three generals in a new cabinet designed to give the nation a strong regime and to put Spain in the ranks of world powers.

Nazi Press Turns Fire From Poles

Berlin, Aug. 9 (INS).—Nazi Germany tonight turned a portion of its biggest editorial guns from Poland to the United States and aimed fierce criticisms at President Roosevelt, Henry F. Grady, the new Assistant Secretary of State, and Harry Hopkins, Secretary of Commerce.

Diplomatic correspondence, official organ of the German foreign office, charged that both President Roosevelt and Grady in statements yesterday "vainly attempted to divert the attention of the American people from their own failure by blaming others."

The official German news agency, D. N. B., accused Hopkins of publishing "tendentious and forged" statistics regarding Germany in his report on July business trends. The agency, in a dispatch dated at Washington, characterized Hopkins as a "German-baiter."

Tobacco Men Put Hope in 1940 Crop Cut

Growers See Buyers, Decide to Sell 1939 Leaf in Regular Way

By the Associated Press

Farmer representatives of flue-cured tobacco growers yesterday placed their hopes for better prices on prospects for sharp curtailment of production next year with quota restrictions on marketing.

They concluded after a meeting with buyers that it would be better to let the record-breaking 1939 crop be sold in the usual manner with hope it would average between $15 and $18 a hundred pounds.

Plans for an early farmer election on the question of invoking marketing quotas on the 1940 crop, a procedure made possible when President Roosevelt signed tobacco amendments to the 1938 farm law, were put aside.

Up to Wallace

The amendments to tobacco provisions of the 1938 farm act authorized Secretary Wallace to compute marketing quotas on the basis of acreage instead of poundage.

Under the old law when marketing quotas were invoked, a grower could sell only a specified amount of tobacco. The new method would permit him to sell all the tobacco he produced in his acreage allotment. Growers rejected poundage quotas for their 1939 sales in a referendum last winter.

Estimate Disputed

Buyers attending the meeting, representing virtually every large tobacco buying company, told the growers a crop of between 675,000,000 and 750,000,000 pounds probably could be taken by the market next year at a satisfactory price to the farmers.

They contended the Crop Reporting Board's estimate of a crop in excess of one billion pounds this year was "excessive" and placed the actual production at between 875,000,000 and one billion pounds. The reporting board will issue a revised estimate today.

Mrs. Bamford Will Plans Trust Fund For Army Library

Charles Town, W. Va., Aug. 9 (AP).—A trust fund for three friends and the establishment of a library for enlisted soldiers at Fort Snelling, Minn., were provided today in the will of Mrs. Martha Byrd Bamford, widow of Gen. Frank Bamford.

Mrs. Bamford, who died here last month, stipulated that her estate be turned into cash, the interest to be divided equally between Mrs. Elizabeth Thomson Grove, Mrs. Genevieve Fenlonkumpe and Mrs. Jane Gillespie Cunningham, wives of Army colonels.

After the death of those three the principal is to be turned over to the U. S. War Department for the library.

D. C. Heads Put Up Trophies for Police Field Day

Police Inspector Edward J. Kelly will be incharge of the field day activities at Griffith Stadium on Labor Day, Police Chief Brown announced yesterday.

Visiting at the District Building the two police officials invited the District Commissioners to attend and were informed trophies would be offered in many of the competitions.

Commissioner Hazen said his trophy would be given to the best precinct tug-of-war team. All precincts will enter a team in this event.

The program will begin about 2 p. m. and will last about three hours, Maj. Brown said. The program will include some dare-devil stunts by members of the motorcycle division, wrestling and boxing, walking races, running and field events.

General admission is $1 and the policeman on the beat has the tickets.

LaGuardia's Day: To D.C., Cincinnati, Chicago and Back

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—Mayor LaGuardia, who gets around, tonight added Cincinnati to his Thursday itinerary, which already provided dedication of a new market in New York, visits to Washington, and Chicago, and a return the same night to New York.

He planned to appear at the market at 5:30 a. m. (E. S. T.); leave by plane for Washington at 6:10; meet there for 15 minutes with the United States Conference of Mayors; dash to Cincinnati for a 15-minute talk with Mayor James G. Stewart; then to Chicago to address a luncheon. He is due back home by dark.

A breathless little group of assistants and reporters hoped to keep up with him.

Two years ago the President recommended flat 10 per cent departmental economies in items susceptible to the cut. The Budget Bureau applied the rule to some $4,000,000,000 of appropriations, holding $400,000,000 in reserve. After contingencies were met, $240,000,000 of this amount was ultimately saved.

Last year, following a similar appeal for Governmental economy by the President, the Budget Bureau withheld $310,00,000 of appropriations in reserve, based on departmental estimates of need. At the close of the last fiscal year, a net saving of $180,000,000 had been effected.

Campaign Anticipated

President Roosevelt's letter yesterday, apparently anticipating a Republican campaign pivoting on the New Deal spending issue, informed agency officials:

"It is my desire that the heads of executive deartments and independent establishments of the Government immediately survey the organization and administrative methods of their departments and establishments for the purpose of effecting improvements in administration and economies in operation.

"I believe that substantial savings can be effected in the cost of Government for this fiscal year and for succeeding fiscal years, and I wish to see such savings reflected in the apportionment of appropriations for the current year and in the submission of estimates for the fiscal year 1941.

"When your estimates for the fiscal year 1941 are presented on September 15 next, they will be accompanied by a statement of anticipated savings which you believe can be effected during the current fiscal year, and the methods through which such savings are expected to be accomplished."

Estimated Savings

For the President's reorganization plans 1 and 2 he had estimated $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 in economies from one and $1,250,000 in the other, and reserves in these amounts already have been set up for the agencies affected.

"Savings in administrative costs will be made during the present and each succeeding year through the operation of these reorganization plans and through improvements in administrative procedures which will be stimulated by the plans," he said yesterday.

Recently discussed in Administration circles as one means of economizing was a policy of non-filling of personnel vacancies, unless the jobs were essential or statutory. This was said to be still under consideration, with no decision reached.

Bell's Testimony Recalled

Before a Congressional appropriations committee early this year, Undersecretary of the Treasury Bell, then acting Budget director, was questioned on bureau plans to "put the Government on a real, sound business basis."

"We hope," Bell replied, "we may be able to standardize procedure, cut down red tape and effect real, desirable economies."

Budget Director Smith since has been following the same general objective, and has fiscal studies and procedural investigations under way in a number of administrative fields.

Credit Extension Is Necessary, Berle Declares

By the Associated Press

Denver, Aug. 9.—President Roosevelt's recent proposals for extending credit to small business, for housing, for local governments and improvements "cannot be dismissed with the contemptuous phrase "'spending-lending.'" Assistant Secretary of State Berle asserted tonight.

The measures he mentionad were passed over by Congress in the last session.

Berle said in an address prepared for delivery before the National Conference of Catholic Charities that "the United States has been built by a 'spending program,' but it has been private, and has been handled through certain traditional banking channels.

"But for 1931 on, they (financiers) have been apparently unable to connect money with enterprise, to bring supplies toward need, to get necessary work forward.

"An enormous capital has been accumulated in this country but its only conceivable reason for existence is to be lent and spent."

Factions Fight for Recognition

The race for the vice presidency was said by officials to lie between Mrs. Verda Barnes, Idaho Falls, Idaho; Miss Mary Quigley, young attorney in the Department of Justice at Washington, and Miss Jeanne Luther, Wichita, Kans.

Two factions from California, fighting for recognition, will be heard before the organization's national committee tomorrow morning in closed session.

One group, headed by Allen Moore, Oakland, president, and David Gill, national committeeman, Los Angeles, was outlawed by the national committee at a meeting in Richmond, Va., last March, which voted to issue a charter to a faction led by James Kehoe, president, San Mateo, and Joseph A. Clorety, jr., committeeman, now living in Washington.

W. Va. Labor Federation Opposes Third Term

Wheeling, W. Va., Aug. 9 (AP).—The West Virginia State (A. F. L.) Federation of Labor today rejected a resolution proposing a third term for President.

Denver, Aug. 9 (AP).—A resolution advocating a third term for President Roosevelt and declaring him to be the only available liberal to block "a reactionary coalition in 1940," was adopted by cheering acclamation today by the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers (C. I. O.).

utes and then walked to Wiley's cage.

"He pushed three notes in front of me and a dirty brown money bag," said Wiley. "The top note read, 'This is a stickup. Put $2,500 in the bag or I'll blow the bank up.' The other two notes were just scribbles."

"I thought I saw something that looked like metal in his bandaged hand, but he had it covered. It may have been a gun. I counted out the money, put it in the bag and pushed it over to him.

"He politely asked for his notes and I gave them to him also. He smiled and walked away."

Robber Jumps Fences

As the youth left the bank door, Wiley yelled to John B. Holiday, cashier. John Strohm, assistant county engineer, walking outside, saw the robber run toward State House hill and, hearing shots, gave chase. John Denyon, trial magistrate at Ferndale, and George B. Woelfel, former justice of the peace, sitting in an automobile, also tried to follow.

The robber escaped after jumping several fences.

Clinics Trace Syphilis' Spread By Patients' Aid

Surgeon General Thomas Parran's statement that "when we look for syphilis, one new case for every one previously known is discovered" is being proved in clinics throughout the country, the United States Public Health Service said yesterday.

At one clinic, interviews with 285 patients revealed 410 contacts, an average of three additional contacts for each two cases interviewed.

Patients with early syphilis were less co-operative in divulging sources of infection than were patients in advanced stages of the disease. More than 40 per cent of the 281 contacts examined for syphilis were found to be infected, and 62 per cent of the 72 contacts were suspected of gonorrhea.

To the Front!—'Iron Monsters' Ready for 'Battle'

Weapons of war like these were not imaginable at Bull Run in '61, but they will be rumbling over the historic battlefield, charging toward "defenders" of the Capital, trying to break their lines in mimic warfare, within a week. They limbered up for the maneu vers yesterday at Fort Meade, Md., where the invaders are concentrating before pushing on to the Manassas "front"

Manassas War Sends 33 Men To Hospitals

Ills Vary From Aches To Concussion; 8 Hurt As Truck Overturns

Special Dispatch to The Post

Manassas, Va., Aug. 9.—Even mimic wars produce casualties and that getting under way here is no exception, a poll of Walter Reed, Fort Myer and Fort Belvoir hospitals yesterday revealed.

A total of 33 soldiers with ills varying from tummy aches to concussion have been treated at these hospitals, though none was in serious condition. Eight were hurt yesterday when a truck rolled over on General Braddock road at the camp after its driver was blinded by dust.

Pvt. Forest F. Curlin, Company G, First Virginia Infantry, suffered a brain concussion. Others injured were Lieut. Richard H. Ryan, Corpl. George F. Longsden, Corpl. Louis E. Parker, and Pvts. Daniel T. Caldwell, John W. Brooks, Alvin E. Goulder and James K. Livesay.

Private Wars Take Toll

Walter Reed Hospital reported 12 soldiers admitted, one with a stamachache, two with appendicitis, and several with broken fingers and jaws and missing teeth, evidence of private wars behind the lines. Fort Myer Hospital reported 13 with minor ailments and Belvoir none.

The bands, that sometimes of an evening serenade the generals, and the colonels, shouldn't be the envy of the ordinary soldiers who sweat without music in the sun. The bandsmen also sweat in the sun—when they're not playing, they're put to work. And maybe while at work, some of them recall what a Union general in the Civil War said when a private soldier requested transfer from the line to the band.

"I want shooters, not tooters," the general replied curtly.

"Not Even a Feather"

A hard-maneuvering unit among the 20,000 soldiers in camp near here asserts itself in a letter to The Post—and with no maybe's:

"Having noted in the——(paper) this morning that the Guard encamped here had chicken for dinner, Sunday, will you please advise the ——(paper) and the reading public that the personnel of the——Regiment, as yet, has not as much as seen a feather, much less chicken. Why, hell, man, we haven't even had a bath, and don't know when we'll get one. We would appreciate your sending a photographer here showing us holding a bucket full of holes over our heads for a shower."

Colonel Complains

For some reason, the Manassas merchants didn't go in for overheavy stocks in advance of the maneuvers. They considered that the Army does its buying through purchasing channels and that the stores could handle the additional patronage from the individual soldiers. But one colonel complained that he can't find an old-fashioned lamp, for his use of nights in his sleeping wagon. Anyhow, the merchants are doing a land-office business in soft drinks, even though the salesmen of souvenir bullets, old muskets and fancy postcards are finding hard going.

A published report that the water supply in the area is getting low made Manassas civic leaders pretty sore. The best water in the world is here and plenty of it, they answered.

A plump Plymouth Rock hen down here has seen no reason to get all hot and bothered about the maneuvers—or to suspend her business the while. She pitched her nest right between two officers' tents. With a colonel and a captain for her audience, the hen returns each morning and lays an egg. The score to date: Five.

Attaches to Attend

Military and air attaches of embassies here will get a birdseye view of American combat tactics next week when the First Army swings into battle.

Col. John A. Crane, foreign liaison officer of the War Department, who will be their guide, explained the attaches, invited by the War Department to attend the war games, "will be kept informed at all times of the progress of the maneuvers."

The trip will provide an opportunity for the representatives of 22 nations to see American weapons and field methods for the first time in many years, he added.

U. S. 'Digs Deeper' In Louisiana; Sensation Waited

New Orleans, Aug. 9 (U.P.).—New political sensations were reported in the making tonight as the Federal Government tightened its investigation of alleged intimidation, perjury and bribery in the acquittal of Abraham L. Shushan, and charges of "hot" gas running.

Shushan was acquitted of criminal charges of income tax evasion in 1935. Subsequently, similar charges were dropped against 11 other politicians.

"Our studies are progressing even more satisfactory than we anticipated there," Assistant United States Attorney General Rogge said of the Shushan case. "We're digging deeper into the whole matter."

Investigation of "hot" gas was an aftermath of indictments returned Monday against former Gov. Richard W. Leche, Freeman Burford, president of the East Texas Refining Co., and Seymour Weiss, treasurer of Huey Long's kingdom, on charges of violating the hot oil act.

Meanwhile, United States District Attorney Viosca announced Burford preferred to remain in jail in Dallas and fight extradition to New Orleans, rather than post his $5,000 bond.

U. S. Avowal Of Interest in China Reported

French Representations To Japan Also Said To Have Been Made

By the Associated Press

Tokyo (Thursday), Aug. 10.—United States and French representations declaring an interest in economic questions affecting China were authoritatively reported today to have been made to Japan.

A foreign office spokesman said Japan was unequivocally opposed to including third powers in the Anglo-Japanese conversations which have been underway here since the middle of July to settle differences brought into the open by the blockade of Tientsin foreign concessions.

It was believed the question of considering third powers in the conference was a new stumbling block to early resumption of the negotiations.

No Ties Implied

British Ambassador Craigie has been awaiting further instructions from his government, which has insisted it could not agree to Japan's demands to drop support of the Chinese national currency because other powers were concerned.

It was understood Eugene H. Dooman, United States Charge d'Affaires, did not express support of Britain in the current parley, but pointed out that economic questions affected American business in China.

Japanese newspapers hinted Britain was awaiting the outcome of a conference of five key ministers of the Japanese cabinet on a proposed Japanese-German-Italian military alliance before resuming the conference.

The meeting was expected to take place today following the return of War Minister Itagaki from an audience with Emperor Hirohito.

Cabinet's Fall Feared

Shanghai, Aug. 9 (AP).—Japan's bitter domestic conflict over a proposed alliance with Europe's totalitarian powers may cause the cabinet's fall or "even more startling" results, declared an informed traveler arriving today from Tokyo.

"Young officers" of the army in their insistence on an outright alliance with Germany and Italy are creating a situation of extreme tension, this source said, in which rumors of extremist threats against the lives of cabinet members are current.

Most of the cabinet, including Premier Hiranuma, high officials close to the Emperor and even the army high command, were described as opposed to sweeping commitments to the Rome-Berlin axis.

Lumber Fires Laid To Arson Ring

Seattle, Aug. 9 (AP).—Fire Chief William Fitzgerald revealed tonight authorities were investigating what they believed to be a coastwide arson plot which has cost the lumber industry thousands of dollars through lumber yard fires in seven Washington cities.

He blamed today's $55,000 fire here, which destroyed the Pankratz Lumber Company and damaged two adjoining industrial plants, on a "firebug ring operating up the entire coast from California to Washington."

sickness or any necessity for discipline in the unit.

The one complaint among the engineers, it was said, was sore feet, resulting from a shortage of shoes. Recruits have had to wear second-hand shoes, Oehmann stated.

Of the scores temporarily laid low by terrific heat, only one man from the District was treated at a regimental infirmary. He was Sergt. Robert Shanahan, of Headquarters Company, 104th Quartermaster Regiment. He was returned to duty after treatment and rest.

On Friday night, District Commissioners Hazen and McCoach will be guests of the officers of the Engineer Regiment at their annual dinner.

Branch Chiefs Visit

Two War Department branch chiefs visited the camp tonight. Maj. Gen. James Magee, Surgeon General of the Army, was the guest of the 104th Medical Regiment at dinner, and Col. William R. Arnold, Chief of Army Chaplains, arrived for a conference with the National Guard Chaplains on moral welfare activities.

Answering those who hold that clergymen should not wear military uniforms, Col. Arnold, first Roman Catholic priest to become the Army's Chief of Chaplains, said:

"The defense of a just government is a religious duty which becomes a means of personal salvation when properly and patriotically performed. So long as there are in this world vicious men who use armed force to establish and maintain tyranny, so long must religious men join arms and prayer in defending the personal liberty which God has committed to their keeping as an inalienable right.

"Therefore, the Church and the Army stand shoulder to shoulder, and when necessary, march to war to preserve the country without which neither could labor for man's temporal and eternal happiness."

Preparations are being made for the visit of Lieut. Gen. Hugh A. Drum tomorrow. The First Army Commander will arrive in Washington at 4:30 p. m. and will be met by Maj. Gen. James K. Parsons, 111th Corps Commander, and a motorcycle escort at the Union Station.

The usual horseplay and mild hazing of recruits which is a part of camp life have had their place her. The camp is laughing over a rookie private who approached the Twenty-ninth Division Signal Officer, with a request from his corporal for 100 pounds of feathers for a machine gun nest.

Lawyers for Closed Bank Depositors To Present Bill

Lawyers who have battled for depositors of the closed Park Savings Bank for the last six years will present their bill for fees next Tuesday to James C. Wilkes, special master of the District Court, who is holding the hearings to distribute the bank's assets.

Attorneys for John F. Moran, receiver, and others who have helped wind up the bank's affairs also will present their bills.

The fees and other expenses will come out of $350,000 to be paid to the bank by directors in a settlement for $500,000 of suits against them. They will pay $150,000, which was allotted to other creditors. About 6,000 depositors, who have filed claims for more than $800,000, will receive what is left of the $350,000 after expenses are paid.

$2,500 Fire Razes Plant In Alexandria

Gladney's 2-Story Auto Shop Destroyed; Flames 20 Feet High

Fire, late yesterday, swept through the two-story brick Gladney Motors Building, 1646 King street, Alexandria, Va., wrecking the office and repair shop, destroying a car, and causing loss estimated at $2,500.

A crowd of several hundred thronged the main business street of the city as firemen fought for more than an hour to bring the blaze under control.

At one time flames leaped 20 feet above the building.

Assistant Chief Thomas Cockrell, who led three Alexandria fire companies in battling the fire, said he believed the blaze might have started from an emery wheel spark.

Firemen said the blaze started in the repair shop at the rear of the building. Jack Rush, employed at Stone's Service Station, which adjoins Gladney's, saw the smoke and turned in the alarm.

When firemen arrived, flames were spreading through the 100-foot long structure and licking at the roof. Employes of the garage removed all but one car, a second-hand automobile. Officials said the car was damaged beyond repair. With damage to the shop and office, the total loss will be near $2,500, G. L. Gladney, president of the firm, estimated.

Several large holes were burned in the roof. Firemen said the steel girders supporting the roof prevented collapse, and the brick walls were apparently undamaged.

Solution Appears Remote in Killing Of Cleric's Child

Camden, N. J., Aug. 9 (AP).—Only a "lucky break," investigators said tonight, will solve the mysterious murder of Wanda Dworecki, 17-year-old auburn-haired cleric's daughter found strangled and beaten in a lonely "lovers' lane" two days ago.

A man taken into custody last night was released today. Police said neither he nor others questioned, including the girl's father, the Rev. Walter Dworecki, pastor of a Polish Baptist church, could give a clue to the slayer's identity.

Life insurance policies totaling $2,695 were carried on the girl's life, with her father named as beneficiary of two policies of $1,000 each. In addition, the detectives said, she had a $10,000 accident policy payable to her father as beneficiary under certain conditions.

$110,000,000 to Go To 485,000 for Security in 1940

Chairman Altmyer, of the Social Security Board, yesterday estimated $110,000,000 would be paid in monthly benefits next year to 485,000 persons, who become eligible under the newly amended social security act.

The board, he announced, has stopped receiving claims for lump-sum old-age insurance benefits from persons 65 years old. As one of the Congressional revisions of the law, which President Roosevelt is expected promptly to approve, monthly payments are substituted for the lump sum, under specified conditions.

Continuation of the present system, Altmeyer said, would have cost not more than $30,000,000 next year, which is $80,000,000 under the new estimated expenditure.

Under the amended program, benefits to workers reaching 65 years will become payable next January 1, instead of in 1942 as originally contemplated.

Freak Explosions Kill D. C. Mechanic And Motorist

Two men died early yesterday of injuries received Tuesday in unusual explosions.

James H. Kerfoot, 32-year-old automobile mechanic, succumbed at Emergency Hospital of a fractured skull. He was struck by a piece of steel which flew from a shock absorber he was welding in a garage in the 1200 block Ninth street northwest. Kerfoot lived at 1204 K street northwest.

The second victim was Edwin N. Crim, 38, of Dallas, Tex., who suffered burns to his face, neck and body while working on his automobile engine Tuesday at Berwyn, Md. He died at Casualty Hospital.

Police said that Crim was adjusting the carburetor when accumulated gasoline became ignited and flared up over his head and body. His wife, Mrs. Thelma Crim, witnessed the accident from a seat in the automobile.

The defendants, Chester Cramer, 21, and John Moher, 18, pleaded guilty to the charge and were placed on probation for six months.

La Follette Calls Roosevelt Neutral Plan a Gamble

Senator La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, yesterday appealed to President Roosevelt to "stay out of European power politics."

Commenting upon the President's statement to newsmen Tuesday, that Congress, in refusing to adopt his neutrality program, had gambled against war, La Follette said intervention in European controversies would be gambling with the fate of 130,000,000 Americans.

The Executive's statement that Congress had blocked any efforts he might make to maintain world peace evoked from La Follette:

"I don't see what move he could make for peace that involves sale of arms, ammunition and implements of war, and that is the nub of the whole problem, as it was presented to us."

Rep. Dies Opposes Third Term

Galveston, Tex., Aug. 9 (AP).—Chairman Martin Dies (Democrat) of Texas, of the Congressional Committee Investigating unAmerican Activities, said today he opposed a third term for President Roosevelt because he thought it would be a bad practice.

"It is right that the American people should always be suspicious of those in power," he said. "There is no danger of an unpopular man becoming dictator. Every dictator who has developed has been a popular man capable of swaying the emotions of the masses."

Dies accused Communists of working secretly to bring about a huge public debt, inflation and the realization "of every crack-pot scheme which they think will destroy private industry and bring about a state of chaos, from which they expect Communism to emerge."

He sailed aboard the liner Seminole for New York enroute to Washington.

Bridges Directs His C. I. O. Union To Expel Spies

San Francisco, Aug. 9 (U.P.).—Harry Bridges tonight retaliated at efforts to deport him by ordering his West Coast Congress of Industrial Organization Unions to expel all "labor spies and employers' under-cover agents."

He said his action, as John L. Lewis' Western director, was based on testimony of Harper Knowles, chairman of the American Legion's committee on radical research, that he had "dozens of undercover agents in West Coast unions working under assumed names."

Counsel for Bridges failed in their latest attempt to show that a conspiracy existed among antilabor groups, police and immigration officials to have the Australian-born union leader deported.

John J. Keegan, captain of Portland (Oreg.) police, testified his office "conducted quite an investigation for the purpose of gathering material for the deportation of Harry Bridges." The investigation, he said, was financed by Portland municipal funds.

960 MEN BLAZE TRAIL TO WHISKEY ECONOMY!
In Dramatic "1,000 Men Survey"—960 Find Old Quaker—Now 3 Years Old—Amazingly Smooth, Mild, Rich in Flavor—Supporting Our Belief That Old Quaker Rivals Many Higher-Priced Brands!
● For every man who enjoys fine whiskey—but also has to watch his pocketbook—here's the cheeriest news of 1939. Old Quaker—now 3 years old . . . ranks with many more expensive whiskies—in taste, bouquet and smoothness! Read why we make this statement. . .
We actually went to 1,000 men—asked them to try Old Quaker and give us their frank opinion. "Smell it!" we said. "Taste it! Take a drink of it! Then say what you think!"
None of these men knew the name, age or price of the whiskey he was trying. Yet, 960 out of the 1,000 were enthusiastic in their praise—found Old Quaker had just about every fine quality a good whiskey can possess.
If you agree with these 960 out of 1,000 men—Old Quaker can probably cut your whiskey bills a third. There's only one way to find out—try Old Quaker yourself!

"Um! Real rich taste! Judge it's mighty old by the slick way it goes down!" remarked John W. Wise.
The Old Quaker Inspector behind every bottle is your Assurance of Quality

"That's wonderful whiskey! Smooth and soft enough to drink straight!" said Edward Nicholson, Brooklyn Automobile Dealer.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

Visiting Juveniles Hang 'Em From Chandeliers!

Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland Shatter Records; Lucia Lull to Do Second Play at Olney; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

THEY AREN'T LIKE THAT AT ALL.

What I mean is that some of the Hollywood gossip writers and many of the movie "fan" magazines have described Judy Garland as a romantic young thing with her heart all a-flutter over the lad with whom she has frequently appeared in pictures and Mickey Rooney as a fresh kid, who ought to be slapped down and put in his place. They have had him suffering from "heart trouble" more than once, too. On the evidence of an hour or so at their table, at the luncheon given in their honor yesterday in the Crystal Room of the Willard Hotel by Carter Barron, Eastern division manager of Loew's, Inc., and, later, backstage at the Capitol while they were putting on their show-stopping act, such specious reporting is nothing more substantial than a lot of poppycock and balderdash, not to say bunk, hooey and the old malarky.

BELL

It was the unanimous vote of all who met them yesterday that Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland are two of the most natural, most unaffected and most genuinely enthusiastic youngsters they had ever met—and some of us have met enough stage and screen celebrities to fill a "Who's Who" of the theater. Mixed with their enthusiasm was a little bewilderment. As Mickey expressed it, "Gee! This is wonderful. To think that they would serve a lunch like this for a couple of kids and that all those people would turn out at the theater to see us. I don't understand it." Judy didn't understand it, either.

If they could have seen themselves as the others saw them, it might have been clearer to them. They were just two normal young people having a thrilling experience and getting the sort of "bang" out of it that any boy of 18 and girl of 16 would. Neither took seriously any suggestion of romance. In fact, they both laughed it right out of the conversation after Mickey, again the spokesman, had announced: "There is no romance in my life. I want to devote all of my time to my work and try to make something of myself. In my book, the two don't go together."

It was at this point that Judy leaned over to your reporter and said, "People get the wrong idea about Mickey and me because we have so much fun together. We are awfully good friends, enjoy the same things and get along perfectly. That's all there is to it." So that was that.

As a matter of fact, Mickey and Judy might almost be brother and sister. Their coloring is much the same—especially the hair. Both have light, reddish brown hair of practically the same shade—and lots of it. Both are intelligent and alert and quick on the verbal trigger—interesting and witty conversationalists. And both signed a million autographs yesterday, Judy from the south side—she writes with her left hand—which Mickey thinks is a crazy idea.

Backstage these two cease to be skylarking young people and become seasoned "troupers" from whom many professionals years their elders might take lessons. They put on a real act for the thousands that stormed the theater. After acknowledging their reception—which came within a split ounce of blowing the roof off the Capitol—Judy sang two songs, "Franklin D. Roosevelt Jones" and "You've Never Been Blue" (I hope that is the title); Mickey sang his own composition, "Oceans Apart," which wasn't supposed to have been introduced until they reached the Capitol Theater in New York, and did his amazing impersonation of Clark Gable and Lionel Barrymore in a scene from "Test Pilot;" they sang "Good Morning," from their next picture, "Babes in Arms," together and wound up with a dance that created such pandemonium that Mickey had to take off his coat and go down into the orchestra pit and beat the life out of Ralph Fox's drums. When they came off, with the crowd still roaring, Mickey remarked between gasps, "Gee whiz, I need a rehearsal. That guy's got a Mickey Mouse setup down there!" One took it that Mickey was a little cramped for space. Incidentally, he can play every instrument in the band.

If Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer want one for their book, their two juvenile stars broke every Washington personal appearance record yesterday. Every inch of standing room was sold and occupied before the first show began and remained that way throughout the day. When this typewriter crossed the corner of Fourteenth and F streets yesterday at 1 p. m., the Capitol's box-office line extended around the corner into Fourteenth street and almost down to Pennsylvania avenue. I assume that the one stretching eastward was as long. That, ladies and gentlemen, is what is known as "packin' 'em in."

Yesterday opened their Eastern tour of personal appearances for Mickey and Judy. They left Hollywood Sunday, arriving here for their first stop yesterday at 8:50 a. m. This morning at 2 they took train for New Haven, with several other "stands" to follow before they open in New York with the premiere of "The Wizard of Oz." Their mothers are with them and their party is under the expert guidance of Les Peterson, who has been here many times before on similar junkets and knows his way around. Neither Judy nor Mickey calls it work. They are merely having fun! Youth is a marvelous thing.

Lucia Lull has scored such an overwhelming hit in the Helen Claire role of Cindy Lou in Clare Booth's comedy, "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," at the Olney Theater this week, that Impresario Cochran has prevailed upon her to remain over the week of August 21 and star at the Olney in "Strictly Dishonorable." That will be immediately following Ruth Chatterton in "You Can't Eat the Goldfish," opening Monday.

You can't put the finger on these RKO people and make it stick. Contrary to yesterday's positive announcement, Irene Dunne and Charles Boyer, in "When Tomorrow Comes," will not open tomorrow at RKO-Keith's. Business continues so great that Ginger Rogers and David Niven, in "Bachelor Mother," will be continued through the 4:30 p. m., performance next Tuesday, August 15. "When Tomorrow Comes" will open Tuesday at 6 p. m.—unless the boys change their minds again, that is.

So the Whole Family Went on the Outing

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Aug. 9 (INS).—You have no conception of the trouble the filming of any biography entails. There is always the family to reckon with and the possibility of getting into legal difficulties. The life of Paul Ehrlich, whose 606th experiment resulted in Salvarsan, the recognized cure for social diseases, has been under discussion at Warners for many months, but not until a few days ago were they able to get in touch with Mrs. Ehrlich. She is now a very old woman, who lives abroad.

LOUELLA PARSONS

John Huston and Heinz Herald have already completed the screenplay and Hal Wallis has placed it ahead of "The Gusher" for Edward G. Robinson, who will make it as his first when he returns from Europe. A few years ago even the mention of such a subject would have been taboo, but now, with the Government taking steps to rid the country of social diseases, there is no longer any excuse for such false modesty.

Ginger Rogers was back at the RKO studio today for that new last scene in "My Fifth Avenue Girl." Gregory La Cava, one of our better directors, it seems, tried to get away from the conventional boy-meets-girl ending by giving his comedy drama an entirely new twist. At the preview, the audience objected so strenuously to the unorthodox ending, that Greg bowed to the popular demand and wrote a typical movie finale. Ginger's interest in a certain W. K. film figure is much discussed and may be a reason for ther finally getting her legal freedom from Lew Ayres.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Townsend Netcher and Adrianne Ames, who have not been seeing much of each other the past year, were another interesting combination. Saw them dancing and supping at the Troc after the preview; Linda Darnell, even prettier off screen than she is in "Hotel for Women," attracted attention when she appeared with personable Robert Shaw; Ann Sheridan and Cesar Romero in a small party at the Troc were flagged by the fans at every step. What a mob at the Chinese Theater and later at the favorite night spots. Joan Bennett and Walter Wanger seem to have forgotten past unpleasantnesses and danced often together. They were in the Darryl Zanuck party. So were Ann Warner, Lili Damita, Richard Gully, the Douglas Fairbanks, jrs., Virginia Bruce and Jack Ruben and some 18 others.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Aug. 9.—I'm wondering if it's heat, or fact that most of Hollywood spends so much time in swimming pools, or that Cecil De Mille has taken his four writers to sea because he thinks better there. Haven't heard whether they do. When Cecil's head goes limp, he puts on his diving helmet and walks on the bottom of ocean. Or is it just a rush of water to the brain that's brought on these seething, salty, sea opuses?

HOPPER

Take a look at the list. "Ruler of the Seas," with Doug Fairbanks, jr. "Thunder Afloat," and Wally Beery being chased by tugs and subs. Errol Flynn, in "The Sea Hawk" and "Captain Horatio Hornblower." "South of Pago Pago," with Jon Hall. "Sons of the Navy." "Captain Caution," at Hal Roache's Metro's "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." Cagney, in "John Paul Jones." "Two Years Before the Mast." And Dottie Lamour's "Typhoon."

When Rubinoff worked at Treasure Island he used to take out Sally Rand's Miss America. She was late one night. When he asked for Miss America of 1939, answer was: "Which one? We have three."

David Bacon, son of former Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts, and out of Boston's top drawer, is a new picture find. What a personality. No, he hasn't recolored.

Pat Morison the hottest gal in town for a scene in "Untamed." They wanted a look of pain on her face so put her to bed with a dozen blankets surrounded by hot water bottles, with temperature flirting at 100.

About a year ago, when Judy Canova, now playing in "Yokel Boy," announced her engagement to Edgar Bergen, I told you she was married. So now you know—she's just gotten a divorce.

And a little tolerance, too, for Betty Grable, who has fought an uphill, losing battle with Jackie Coogan.

Wonder if Billie Burke is Norman McLeod's good luck charm? She's been in his last three pictures, now in "Remember," his first at Metro.

Child in Carole Lombard's present picture wouldn't go to sleep during a scene. And while they were trying her stand-in slept peacefully. Stand-in's now sleeping beauty.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Aug. 9.

TRIUMPH: Buster Keaton's current film contract bars personal appearances at cafe shows. Keaton, accompanied by his manager, visited a night club and was introduced from the floor. "Applaud, folks," the master of ceremonies urged, "and you'll get him up here to do something" . . . "We're sorry," Keaton's manager informed, "but his contract doesn't allow it . . . The sad-faced comic then decided to show his independence, threw off restraining hands, and insisted: "Yeah? I'll show 'em. Contract my eye" . . . Expertly, he went through the violent routines of his snake-dance, concluded with a solid flop on his face—and was rushed to a hospital where four stitches were taken in his forehead . . . "That's terrible," his manager groaned . . . Keaton bared his right arm, and said: "You think that's something? Look at this—broken the same way last year."

QUEST: A hectic pool game was being played at The Players Club. Owen Meech, the actor, who has poor eyesight, and who was trying to find a number in the phone-book, brought the book to the pool table, set it under the bright billiard light—and started turning the pages.

REFUSAL: Lord Northcliffe, the newspaper publisher, always refused to be interviewed . . . He explained by telling of the little boy who said he wouldn't like any jam on his bread. When asked why, the boy replied: "Because my mother works in a jam factory."

SUCCESS: The Cotton Club officials are treasuring a photograph they took of Stravinsky, the orchestra conductor, while he was a ringsider there . . . Stravinsky apparently was enjoying himself, and told his companion: "Ah, America—it's a wonderful place, America" . . . Then he was asked to pose for a photograph, and refused . . . "But Mr. Stravinsky," the press-agent pleaded, "America—this wonderful place—everybody poses for pictures here" . . . So Stravinsky posed.

SIN: At the American Women's Association Building, whose management has prescribed a midnight curfew for male visitors, a man who visited one of the female tenants forgot to return his permit card at the desk, and so at 1 a. m. the excited desk clerk phoned the lady's room . . . "Is there a man in your room now?" the clerk demanded. . . . The indignant young lady was told of the missing card . . . "He left a long time ago," she informed. "Besides, I think your rule is very silly. Tell me—is there any special hour for Sin?"

ENTERPRISE: Three years ago, when the Cole Porter show, "Anything Goes," opened on Broadway, to Chinese were signed to appear in a number of the scenes . . . William Gaxton, who starred in that show, just heard from the two Chinese. The first, to whom Gaxton always spoke pidgin English, returned to China. In perfect English he informed the star that his father is president of the University of Canton . . . The second one spent his stage-earnings for plates of bright new teeth. While they improved his appearance, the new plates completely spoiled his diction. He therefore is earning a living by posing as the wide-grinning Chinese "Menace" for magazine illustrations.

YOUTH: Two movie scouts visited Chicago seeking new talent. An applicant came to their hotel, and had himself announced as "Capt. Mann. I'm a juvenile." He was told to come upstairs, and give an audition . . . Capt. Mann proved to be somewhat immature, and was asked his age . . . "23," he informed . . . "Twenty-three—and a captain already?" the scouts asked. "What are you captain of?" . . . "I'm captain," he proudly replied, "of the ushers at the Oriental."

Varied Bills Listed for New Theater Week

Subjects Vary From History to 'Funnies;' Outdoor Amusements

"STANLEY AND LIVINGSTONE." The dramatic order James Gordon Bennett issued to his finest reporter, Henry M. Stanley, to "Find Livingstone!" is brought to the Palace screen with Spencer Tracy in the starring role of Stanley. The film reaches its climax in a scene before the Royal Geographical Society, which is not convinced that the reporter actually found the missionary-explorer. Sir Cedric Hardwicke plays Ligingstone, and the other leading players are Charles Coburn, Nancy Kelly, Richard Greene, Henry Hull and Henry Travers. Opens this morning.

Earle

"EACH DAWN I DIE." James Cagney and George Raft are teamed for the first time in this film of a newspaper reporter pitting his wits against an underworld gang. Railroaded into prison because he knows too much, the reporter encounters a gangster noted for his daring. Jane Bryan, George Bancroft, Maxie Rosenbloom, Victor Jory, Stanley Ridges, Alan Baxter and John Wray. On the Earle stage, the performers include Bob Dupont, humorist; Moore and Revel, dancing comedians; Eddie White, Alvin Kendall and Drew and the Earle Roxyettes in their first acrobatic number. Opens tomorrow morning.

Capitol

"HOTEL FOR WOMEN." Elsa Maxwell's screen debut is the feature of this film that tells the story of a group of girls on their own in a big city. The noted party giver appears in a large cast that includes Ann Sothern, James Ellison, Jean Rogers, Linda Darnell, Lynn Bari, June Gale, John Halliday, Alan Dinehart, Sidney Blackmer and Joyce Compton. On the Capitol stage Woody Herman brings his "Band That Plays the Blues." The popular orchestra leader of the airlanes tops a bill that includes Vic Hyde, the one-man band; Joe and Jane McKenna and the Three Trojans. Opens tomorrow morning.

RKO-Keith's

"BACHELOR MOTHER." The Ginger Rogers comedy continues into a third week, with a cast that includes David Niven, Frank Albertson, Charles Coburn and E. E. Clive. The merriment arises when Ginger, a shop girl, sees a woman place a baby on the steps of a foundling home and props it against the door just as the matron arrives.

Metropolitan

"BLONDIE TAKES A VACATION." Third in the series of domestic comedies based on the popular comic strip figure, this light-hearted charade is played by the trio which has been identified with Blondie since her first appearance on the screen. Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake and Larry Simms form this threesome of Blondie, Dagwood and Baby Dumpling. Their antics break up the peaceful calm of a lakeside resort and Donald Meek heads the supporting cast. Opens tomorrow morning.

Columbia

"SECOND FIDDLE." After a previous engagement at the Capitol, this musical comedy returns with music by Irving Berlin and with Sonja Henie, Tyrone Power and Rudy Vallee in the leading roles. The story concerns the unknown girl who arrives in Hollywood to play the heroine of a best-selling novel. Edna May Oliver, Mary Healy, Lyly Talbot and Alan Dinehart are in the cast. Opens tomorrow morning.

Little

"OF HUMAN BONDAGE." Leslie Howard and Bette Davis continue in this reissue of the W. Somerset Maugham novel concerning a medical student and his passion for a worthless girl, whose influence drags him down to her own despair. Frances Dee, Reginald Owen and Reginald Denny are in the cast of this release of several years ago, in which Miss Davis won acclaim for performance as Mildred.

Olney

"YOU CAN'T EAT THE GOLDFISH." Ruth Chatterton is the star at the country playhouse next week in this new comedy by Gladys Unger and Marcella Burke. The stage and film star has been playing the role in the New England barn theaters, preparatory to bringing it to Broadway in the fall. Opens Monday evening. Meanwhile, Lucia Lull continues in "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," with matinees this afternoon and Saturday.

Trans-Lux

"WINDWARD ISLANDS," a travel view of the Caribbean, is the central short subject for the new week. "Cousin Wilbur," an "Our Gang" comedy; Walt Disney's "Donald's Nephew" and a sport film on greyhound racing complete the bill at the newsreel theater. Opens tomorrow morning.

Mount Vernon

"IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT." This musical film opens at the drive-in, auto theater tonight to run through the Saturday midnight performance. The large cast includes Zorina, Kenny Baker, Charlie McCarthy and Edgar Bergen and Andrea Leeds. Sunday, through next Wednesday, the bill will be "The Goldwyn Follies" co-starring Clark Gable and Claudette Colbert.

Glen Echo

"TINY" HILL and his dance orchestra are winning high favor at the Spanish Garden ballroom at the amusement park these evenings. There is dancing each week-day evening from 9 until midnight. One of the most popular of the amusement features of the park is the Dodgem Ride. There are some 50 other attractions.

SUNSET CRUISES continue to be the sailings most in demand of the City of Washington, which leaves its Seventh street wharf for this early evening cruise at 5:30 p. m. each week day, returning at 7:45. Other cruises of the steamer are to Mount Vernon and Marshall Hall at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. and a moonlight cruise each evening at 8:30.

SUNDAY CRUISES, sailing from the Water street dock at 9 a. m. for Colonial Beach, are a popular all-day feature of this river steamer. There are two Saturday evening cruises, with name bands aboard for dancing, the first sailing at 8:45 p. m. and the second at 12:30 a. m. The Potomac also makes a cruise each evening at 8:45.

Cross Roads

"YES, MY DARLING DAUGHTER." Mark Reed's comedy of a daughter who seeks to do what her mother very nearly did in her Greenwich Village days opens its two-week engagement at the Virginia Barn Theater Monday evening. Izetta Jewel, jr., steps into a leading role, a breach occasioned by the sudden illness of Catherine Ryan. Don Sisler, Peggy Mansfield and Ted Field are in the cast.

Roadside

"AURORA FLOYD." This melodrama of the 1860s, subtitled "The Dark Deed Done in the Wood," continues for a second week, with Betty Gray, Natalie Core, Richard Kreuzberg, John van Sikken, Milton Freedman and Harold Stepler in the cast. There is also an entr'acte on the Roadside bill.

Actors Don War Paint to Demand Self-Rule For Profession at A. F. L. Session Today

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

The stage will be set at Atlantic City today for the Hollywood and Broadway stars who are converging on the city to battle at the American Federation of Labor convention for the right to govern the acting profession. Singer Harry Richman is shown with Sophie Tucker, head of the American Federation of Actors, of which Richman is vice president, planning their attack

By International News Service.

New York, Aug. 9.—Their grease paint temporarily replaced by war paint, a constellation of movie stars arrived from Hollywood tonight to join radio, stage and opera headliners who fly to Atlantic City, N. J., tomorrow morning to play in the theatrical "Battle of the Century" now brewing within the ranks of the American Federation of Labor.

Ralph Morgan, president of the Screen Actor's Guild, who flew into Newark airport this evening with a planeload of Hollywood's most resounding names in his supporting cast, will lead the embattled actors and actresses into the executive session of the A. F. of L. to demand "self rule for the profession."

The threat of a strike which might paralyze the film studios and ultimately darken every motion picture theater in America was voiced by the Hollywood contingent.

Want Charter Voided

The group headed by Morgan, which represents the powerful 4 A's (Associated Actors and Artists of America) will demand that the A. F. of L. void the charter issued by another A. F. of L. affiliate, the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, to Sophie Tucker's American Federation of Actors. The stagehands' union chartered the Tucker union four weeks ago following the 4 A's expulsion of A. F. of A.

Those who flew in from Hollywood who will go by plane to Atlantic City include Binnie Barnes, Jean Muir, Lucille Gleason, Henry Hull, Mischa Auer, Edward Arnold, Wayne Morris, Larry Steers and Morgan. Broadway luminaries taking the same plane include Lawrence Tibbett, barytone star of the Metropolitan Opera and president of the American Guild of Musical Artists; Peggy Wood, Miriam Hopkins, Frank Gillmore, president of 4-A's, and other union executives.

Early tomorrow morning another group of stage stars head for Atlantic City by train. This delegation includes Tallulah Bankhead and Frederick March.

Morgan Contradicts Green

"We're fighting this out within our own organization, the American Federation of Labor," said Morgan, who was hot under the collar for more reasons than New York's 90-degree temperature.

"We're going to fight it out in that organization, but we will stand by our own international (the 4-A's)," he declared. "I should say that we will stick to our own international no matter what the outcome of the executive session tomorrow. We are on our way to Atlantic City to uphold the freedom, rights and integrity of the 4 A's, for actors, by actors and with actors only!

"There's nothing jurisdictional about this fight!' snapped Morgan, flatly contradicting William Green, president of the A. F. of L., who has insisted that the row between the stage hands and the actors' unions is a question of jurisdiction.

"This is a raid by the I. A. T. S. E. If stage hands can raid an actors' union, then there is no reason why we, as actors, can't raid, let us say, the musicians' union.

32 Seek Hearing

"As long as the A. F. of L. remains honest, I personally will stay with it, but unless it upholds its own constitution, I want nothing to do with it, now or ever."

It Atlantic City, Green was facing a mobilization of 32 actors clamoring to be heard before the executive council. He announced tonight that the council meeting will be secret and closed to the press. He hinted that the screen actors have made their trip for nothing.

"The Screen Actors' Guild,' he said, "can be heard as part of the 4-A, but so far as I know they have no grievance. There has been no attempt to transgress their jurisdiction."

Green asserted that the A. F. of L. executive council cannot compel the 4-A to take back the A. F. A., but said it does have the power to order the I. A. T. S. E. to surrender the A. F. A. The council, he continued, may also confirm and approve the stagehands' adoption of the A. F. A., since it has power to define jurisdiction of an international union.

The council will complete its hearing by nightfall tomorrow, Green said, but he expressed doubt the council would take action before Friday.

Green said he thought the council would hand down a "clear-cut" would take action before Friday.

Green said he thought the council would hand down a "clear-cut" decision, ordering disputing unions to take some definite action, rather than withhold decision pending further investigation.

Johnson Wins In Mississippi, Lacks Majority

Harrison and White Expected to Back Conner in Runoff

By the Associated Press.

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 9.—A runoff election with an ironical twist became assured today when tabulations showed Paul B. Johnson, of Hattiesburg, led a seven-man gubernatorial field but failed to gain a majority in yesterday's State Democratic primary.

Johnson, a former Congressman, bore the indorsement of United States Senator Bilbo and ran up 84,881 votes in unofficial returns from 1,381 of 1,660 precincts, well ahead of former Gov. Mike Sennett Conner at 64,728.

In the August 29 runoff for the nomination, Conner was expected to have the active support of Senator Harrison and Gov. Hugh White.

The new governor will be in a key position in selecting the State's delegation to the 1940 national Democratic convention and deciding who will get Mississippi's 18 convention votes.

Bilbo has been an outspoken advocate of a third term for President Roosevelt while Harrison is a possible "favorite son" recipient of the State's convention votes.

Bilbo, in 1936, backed Conner in an unsuccessful effort to unseat Harrison. If the expected line-up materializes the senior Senator will be plumping for a former opponent, while "the man" Bilbo will back his current choice against a former ally.

Thomas L. Bailey received 49,118 votes. Other candidates were Lester Franklin, Lieut. Gov. J. B. Snider, Dr. Mark W. Gantt and George Ritchey.

Hoover's 65th Birthday To Be 'Another Day'

Los Angeles, Aug. 9 (AP).—Herbert Clark Hoover, who in his own words as "the tiredest man in America" when he began life as a former President in 1933, will be 65 years old tomorrow.

"It will be just another day," Hoover said as he prepared to leave with Mrs. Hoover for their home in Palo Alto.

Eating Best Way To Take Vitamins

Chicago, Aug. 9 (AP).—The value of vitamins in preventing disease was reaffirmed today by the American Medical Association, but it advised taking them with a knife and fork.

A medical report of experts said many persons don't eat the right foods—or enough of them—to get all the vitamins they should. But it asserted that taking vitamin mixtures "cannot replace the need of adequate amounts of a well-balanced diet."

Woman Converts Self Into Flaming Pyre

Philadelphia, Aug. 9 (INS).—An unidentified woman soaked herself in gasoline and touched a match to herself in the rest room of a parking lot opposite Rittenhouse Square late today. The body was burned beyond recognition.

D. C. Watchmaker Is Shot to Death; Leaves Note

A Washington watchmaker was found shot dead, a pistol in his right hand, in a New York hotel room yesterday. He was identified as Julius Weiss, 57, of 1113 I street northeast, a District resident for the last twelve years.

A note scribbled on an envelope asked police to notify his wife here. At the residence it was learned that Weiss had left two weeks ago for a vacation in New York. He was a native of Homestead, Pa., and was a member of the German Theater Club.

Pageant Indorsed

The Falls Church, Va., Young Democrats last night indorsed presentation of the pageant "The Birth of the Flag," in which eight of the club members are participating. John A. K. Donovan, the club's host, gave a report of the District meeting in Alexandria.

Modernized Strategy

Modern warfare has the same relation to the organized combat of the past that the ox-cart has to the airplane. It is no longer earthbound and has to reckon not only with the enormously heightened range and destructiveness of modern weapons but also with the still undetermined effects of wholesale mechanization.

For these reasons, the strategic lessons that were once derived from the battles and campaigns of long ago now have only a limited validity. General staffs now find it necessary to reorient themselves, paying less attention to Waterloo and Gettysburg and the Marne and more to Guadalajara, the Ebro fighting and Changkufeng.

Two interesting manifestations of this process of reorientation are at hand, although from widely separated parts of the world. The Italian army has just completed its summer maneuvers in the Valley of the Po. And in neighboring Virginia, the Bull Run battlefields are now the scene of extended maneuvers engaging large numbers of Regular Army troops and National Guardsmen.

The choice of these respective sites is significant. The Valley of the Po has for centuries been the classic objective of armies that have come down over the Alpine passes and not infrequently have made themselves masters of the towns and cities of northern Italy. In view of the possibility that if war breaks out in Europe, France and Italy will be in opposite camps, it is not surprising that the Italian military leaders have sought to simulate war conditions in the Po Valley with the view to examining whether and under what conditions an attack from the west and the northwest can be driven back. And they are fully aware of the fact that while the passes are the same, the armies that may in the future try to come over them into the lush plains of northern Italy will be equipped in a far different fashion.

Similarly, while the object of the Bull Run maneuvers is to test the defense of Washington, these maneuvers will be no re-enactment of the battles bearing that name but an attempt to apply modern methods of warfare and modern strategy in an area which saw significant fighting in the past.

Tension In Japan

Once again, as so often in the past, a struggle is raging in Japan between the civilian elements and a powerful faction in the army. The current issue is whether or not the island empire should conclude an outright military alliance with Germany and Italy.

The cabinet, headed by Baron Hiranuma, is believed to be strongly opposed to such a far-reaching move. Germany and Italy could render Japan very little direct support in the prosecution of the war on China. Nor could they begin to replace the democratic powers as markets for Japanese goods.

The more conservative leaders in Japan feel, moreover, that an alliance with the axis powers would sharpen the antagonism of the democracies and pave the way for an increasing measure of commercial and financial reprisals. It would also, they fear, end Soviet Russia's hesitation over entering the British-sponsored peace front and thus bring about a coalition the bearing of which on the Far Eastern situation would clearly not be to Japan's advantage.

The "ginger group" in the army, consisting of the same elements that were responsible for the invasion of Manchuria in 1931 and the initiation of the attack on China two years ago, are not impressed by such arguments. They maintain that something dramatic is needed to offset the failure to win a victory over China, the denunciation of the 1911 commercial pact by the United States, the stiffening British attitude and the ever-present threat of Russia. An outright military alliance with Germany and Italy, the hotheads say, would intimidate the Western democracies and Russia and thus give Japan more of a free hand than she has enjoyed in bringing the war on China to a successful conclusion.

Hitherto this group has had its way. But the wiser civilian leaders in Tokyo realize that the army extremists are gambling with Japan's destiny in a wholly irresponsible fashion and are doing everything possible to hold them in check, at least on this issue. Whether the conservatives' viewpoint will succeed, however, is none too certain. The very circumstance that the army has failed to achieve a conclusive victory abroad may cause it to seek a victory at home, at whatever cost and regardless of the consequences.

Cotton Complications

The International Cotton Federation, meeting at Zurich over the week-end, adopted a resolution sharply critical of policies of the Roosevelt Administration which have "seriously restricted the sale of American cotton."

Copies of this group protest from foreign purchasers of American cotton have been sent to Secretaries Hull and Wallace. It notes the "chaotic conditions created in every branch of the cotton trade due to uncertainties as to the future method of disposal of United States Government loan cotton stocks." And the Administration is reasonably urged "to adopt a long-term policy relative to cotton releases" and seriously to consider the "absolute need of returning to customary fundamentals and principles of trading."

It is ironical that this message should have been dispatched to the head of the Department of State, who has labored unceasingly to expand our foreign trade by removing just such artificial barriers to exchange of goods as are complained of here. It is no less ironical that such an appeal should go to the Secretary of Agriculture, who has been equally diligent in trying to secure stabilized prices for our agricultural products.

The sense of irony is intensified by any survey of the complications—economic and political—resulting from price-raising policies which have led to the impounding of a vast supply of loan cotton, and which have reduced our cotton exports to the lowest level in 50 years. In an endeavor to move the high-priced cotton Secretary Wallace has in desperation resorted to export subsidies. That policy, of course, conflicts directly with the Hull reciprocal trade program.

Furthermore, subsidization runs counter to an Administration disposition—policy would be too strong a word—to apply economic pressure to governments whose actions the American people disapprove. The impression produced by the recent denunciation of our commercial treaty with Japan was to a considerable extent neutralized by the simultaneous realization that Japan will greatly benefit from the purchase of our subsidized export cotton.

On top of that comes word that the Export-Import Bank is preparing to assume a large proportion of the risk of financing sales of subsidized cotton to the Franco government in Spain. To those Americans who regard government-controlled financing agencies as political rather than economic instrumentalities, such an employment of loan funds will be viewed as a gesture of friendliness toward a Fascist state. The arrangement, however, finds its justification in a desire to hold for our shippers a market that would otherwise be captured by growers of cotton in other parts of the world.

Indeed, if we are ever to make substantial inroads upon the millions of bales of Government-controlled cotton which our Zurich critics deplore, it is obvious that exports of the commodity must be pushed wherever there is a market, even in disregard of diplomatic policy. This is the more appropriate because the Export-Import Bank was organized primarily to assist American exporters in holding and expanding their foreign outlets. It was not established as a political agency for rewarding friendly, and discriminating against unfriendly, governments.

Undoubtedly, the bank's transactions involve a rather high degree of risk. If they did not, private financing agencies could be relied upon to provide the necessary funds without Government intervention. For the management of the Export-Import Bank the chief question at issue is whether the risk of a particular transaction is warranted by the probable benefits resulting from it. From the cotton growers viewpoint there is no doubt that enlarged exports to Spain and Japan, whether subsidized or not, are welcome.

If Congress comes to feel that too much latitude has been given the Export-Import Bank, or if the desire is to convert it from a financing agency serving our shippers into a financing agency serving our foreign policy, then Congress should so declare. But in the absence of any such declaration, there is nothing to prevent the Export-Import Bank from employing its funds to facilitate sales of goods to any country, democracy or dictatorship, that is ready to meet its terms.

Casualty Of "Peace"

During the past few years Imperial Airways, Ltd., has built up an air service which has greatly shortened the distance between the far-flung portions of the British Empire.

The air routes traversed by the planes and fliers of this company total 22,000 miles and of late an average of over 1,100 passengers has been carried each month. Like similar ventures in commercial aviation in other lands, the activities of Imperial Airways have revealed the constructive uses to which the progress of aviation can be put.

This week, however, Imperial Airways found it necessary to suspend all further passenger bookings on its lines. The demand for the company's services happen to be increasing. But because of the British rearmament program there is a shortage of suitable flying boats for commercial use, a shortage of trained civilian fliers and a new emphasis on fuel conservation. So, in one further important particular, a state of latent war is making necessary a curtailment of promising peacetime activities.

The Church in Austria

Ever since the Anschluss the dispossession by the Nazis of the Austrian Catholic Church has been proceeding steadily, though by such carefully measured stages as to have been scarcely noticed by the outside world. It is likely in the end, however, to prove as thorough as the seizure of the English monasteries by Henry VIII after the Reformation or the expropriation of church property in the French Revolution.

An Associated Press dispatch from Berlin discloses that already thousands of Austrian religious of both sexes have been driven into exile, or forced to seek employment as office workers, factory workers and domestic servants, because of the seizure of monasteries, convents and hospitals and the suppression of the confessional schools. Lay brothers of an age for such service are being forced into labor battalions and into the army.

Indeed in 15 months since the Anschluss the Nazi scourge has fallen more often and more severely upon the Austrian Catholics than upon their co-religionists in the old Reich in the seven years since Hitler's accession to power. The vile insults inflicted, undoubtedly with official encouragement, on Theodore Cardinal Innitzer have surpassed anything yet attempted against the persons of the other German cardinals.

The explanation is not immediately apparent. However, it will be recalled that the wholesale pogroms of last November were preceded by a campaign of terror and confiscation against the hapless Austrian Jews which far exceeded in scope and fury anything until then attempted in Berlin, Cologne or Munich. Seemingly, then, Austria, which has in fact if not theory the status of a conquered province, is being used by the Nazis as the proving ground for the measures they intend to apply throughout the whole Reich.

Yet, notwithstanding the miseries that the Anschluss has brought to the Austrian Catholics, it has also unified the power of resistance by German Catholics in general. Thus at Fulda, where the German bishops will gather for conference next week, Cardinal Innitzer and the other Austrian prelates, as well as those from the German-speaking diocese of the Sudetenland, will act for the first time jointly with the bishops of the old Reich.

The purpose of the conference is the preparation of a pastoral letter to be read in all churches throughout the Greater Reich, which will, according to persons at the Vatican, have "considerable political significance." Thus Fulda may prove an historic name both for German Catholicism and for the world. At any rate, it will be worth careful watching.

Bustles And Bootees

As regularly as heat waves and war scares in August come the fall fashion announcements from Paris. And for some curious reason they function in inverse ratio. The hotter the weather and the more serious the war menace, the heavier and giddier the new furs and dresses.

This year, in addition to the usual publicity stories and broadcasts on the fall openings, several models were brought over on the Clipper, among them a sheer wool dress, a back-to-school, and a mysterious "midriff" confection of velvet crepe. To the marvels of science is added the fact that with the Clipper we can now get these garments a few days earlier in August.

Along with these little numbers came the findings of one noted fashion expert, Miss Katherine Vincent, to the effect that Paris is sanctioning silhouettes. But lest this happy discovery relieve anyone's feelings, she hastens to add that Schiaparelli favors the trim cigarette line, while Molyneux is launching a "bouncing double-swing skirt." It sounds like a choice between fascism and communism.

Unanimously Paris is hailing the return of the mid-Victorian era. They prophesy high shoes and bootees, bustles in back, draperies and muffs in front. Hats and colors take almost any direction, and shoulders are "vaguely broadened." They ought to be, to carry the burdens of the age.

Altogether it isn't an encouraging outlook. Only by contrast with most of the other European news can we reconcile ourselves to bustles, muffs, and, yes, even bootees.

Letters To The Editor

The People's Voice

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: All that beating of jungle drums, all those shrieks of bloodthirsty joy heard in America today, must not alarm us. The Indians have not arisen from their graves like ghosts at Verdun to recapture the country It is only the Wall Street press and radio glorifying and celebrating the Wall Street Congress; it is only the fat boys celebrating the scalps they have taken.

What in the world is there to be jubilant about in the fact that millions of unemployed are to have the last desperate piece of bread snatched from their mouths? What decent person but must shudder to think of what may now happen to 12,000,000 of his jobless fellow Americans?

And what man or woman can be happy over the fact that no more help may be forthcoming for thousands of farmers whose homes are threatened with destruction?

To me it seems like the most hollow of triumphs. These Tories have made only a palace revolution. A coalition of money-bag Republicans and money-bag Democrats has captured the governmental machine for the moment.

This palace revolution was made by a peculiarly undemocratic trick. It became successful only by winning over a large group of Democratic Congressmen who had been elected on Roosevelt's coat tails. They were sent by the people of their districts to fight for the New Deal. But they betrayed their people. And now that the Congress has adjourned, the traitors are facing the people they have betrayed.

The United States is still a democracy. The palace revolution has yet to be voted on by the people. And Roosevelt is still there, and millions of New Deal leaders who will fight to the last ditch. The voice of the people has yet to be heard. Ask Hoover.

Charity for All

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Morrison's letter in The Post of August 5, wherein he disparages the need for aid to the Spanish refugees, contains profascist innuendoes. He asks if those engaged in relief work "presume that Franco's policy of reconstructing Spain is a negative one of vindictiveness?" This question should read—"Is Franco's policy of building a fascist Spain one of exterminating every believer in democracy?"

To one who has been receiving letters written from French concentration camps by former Spanish comrades in arms, Mr. Morrison's suggestion that Franco would not perpetrate an injustice against the refugees is infuriating. These letters tell of the atrocities committed against the families of these men through the sheer pique of Franco's police at not being able to get at the refugees themselves.

As for the hackneyed charge that loyalist Spain was a "satellite of Moscow," I can only refer Mr. Morrison to more accredited sources of facts than he evidently has heretofore used.

As a veteran of the Lincoln Brigade I must label the "charity-begins-at-home" cry as irrelevant. Americans must aid democracy and democrats everywhere if we want to spare ourselves the horrors which fascism is imposing on the Spanish people. It is possible to aid both our own downtrodden lower economic third and the Spanish refugees. Mr. Ickes finds it so, why can't we all?

Registration For Elections

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Readers Digest for August brings in condensed form Courtney Ryley Cooper's most interesting article from The Post of July 9.

I most emphatically subscribe to the principles developed therein, but I did miss reference to one phase of our public life where fingerprinting would be equally desirable and bring about excellent results: registration for elections.

I am a naturalized citizen, and was born and raised in Zurich, Switzerland. The election laws in that country differ somewhat in the 22 democracies which compose the republic. A few of the rural cantons (Appenzell and Unterwalden), still adhere to the "Langsgemeinde," outdoor meetings, where the eligible citizens attend publicly and solemnly to their exalted duty, the elections and other voting business.

A very efficient check is used in Zurich (330,000 inhabitants), but explaining the method employed there, I usually am told, "That's fine, of course, but don't you know that here we have to contend with corrupted political machines?" Unfortunately, this is true in many cities, but I have the faith in sound Americanism which sooner or later must and will break through the line of resistance.

Being a small nation, but very democratic, so much of the communal, state and national business is submitted to the voter for approval or rejection that the law actually forbids to call the citizen to the urn more than once a month! There are times when legislative matter is put before the voters two and three months in a row.

Because of compulsory registration in Switzerland you are automatically called to the polls if and when you are eligible. In Zurich the system works this way:

As you move into a locality you register at the city hall within 10 days. A "voting envelope" is made out in your name, and the necessary personal history noted on it. These envelopes, about 4x6 inches in size, are then filed and about a week before a voting date the police deliver these envelopes to your address, containing all necessary forms for the polls in question.

The polling places, in public rooms, are open Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning until 12 noon. The urns are properly guarded and as you step up your full name is double-checked with copied records from the compulsory registration lists, whereupon you make the turn of the urns, dropping your votes into the respective slots and depositing your envelope into the last one.

If you are unable to go to the polls, your envelope must be returned at an early date to the district police station, to be filed until again needed.

The elimination of shady practices is thus assured, and I am confident that similar procedure could be employed here to advantage. I doubt that present cost of elections would be surpassed, what with the frequent investigations of election frauds and the repeated necessary registrations. The use of the public schools for this purpose is, of course, without cost.

Add fingerprinting to the compulsory registration and there can be little doubt of an appreciable reduction in the total cost of our administration, with greater honesty thrown in as a bargain.

Improper Solicitation

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I fully agree with you that the solicitation of Charles B. Ingram, in behalf of the personal library that misguided New Dealers want to erect at Hyde Park, is highly reprehensible especially since this solicitation is directed at Government employes of his department.

I wonder if Attorney General Murphy has any opinion on the legality of the subject, or whether he can only murmur with John L. Lewis that this is indeed an "evil world" . . . or to be exact a "sinful world." We ought to hear from ministers of the Gospel on this subject, since they were invited back in 1933 to lend support to Franklin D. Roosevelt, at a time when he was magnanimously giving his autograph to a book that Charles Michelson was using to shake down the beneficiaries of New Deal spending.

This practice of the Honorable Charles B. Ingram is merely part and parcel of those other practices that have been imported into Washington from New York State in the last six and a half years, practices that have been called rackets in New York State, and the object of criminal prosecution by District Attorney Dewey. These rackets were in the poultry business, building trades and truck drivers' unions, etc.

It is unfortunate that the district attorney in Washington is not able to run down these derelictions of official Washington, and prosecute them under the Hatch act, because it is clear to any intelligent man that the Ingram solicitation comes in conflict with the spirit of that act.

Where is Attorney General Murphy? Won't somebody page him?

Washington, Aug. 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Commendable, indeed, is your editorial of August 8, entitled "Improper Solicitation." It seeks to give to the rank and file of the Department of Agriculture a "square deal." Without question, the preparation of the circular letter was on "Government time," requiring, also the use of Federal stationery and supplies.

The Comptroller General has ruled as to the use of Government space by employe-supported organizations. Perhaps this is not "private enterprise," within the meaning of the law, but, to quote a stage personality, "confidentially, it stinks."

The Baker Must Benefit

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am referring to the very reasonable article in The Post of July 29, by W. L. Schurz, on "Latin America and Refugees."

There seems to be much criticism of those who oppose the opening of our doors to these minorities from Europe, for whom we must feel increasing pity and sorrow. Much has been said about the terrible experience of the 900 Jewish refugees refused admittance to Cuba, and yet there is reason for that refusal.

I am quoting from a recent letter from a Spanish friend in Havana, whose husband has been for long years a prominent merchant. The quotation is:

We have a contingent of Hebrews who have invaded as far as Egido street in old Havana and in Vedado they live together in great numbers. One bakery delivers 20 loaves of bread to one house, so you can figure the number of families living under one roof, and they are crowding into every business.

This letter will show those who are so sentimental about the refusal of Cuba to admit the unfortunates, why such refusal occurred.

The Post Impressionist

Nameless

I AM NOT one of those far-sighted and well-ordered persons who visit the dentist every six months. Sometimes I have been known to let seven months go by without visiting a dentist, and sometimes even longer. Once, I squirm to confess, seven years whirled by . . . but I'm living that down gradually. The last time I felt one of these ominous checkups coming on, I decided to take the afternoon off, visit my dentist in a leisurely fashion, then stroll around the town a bit in the mild sunshine, and finish the afternoon at the Trans-Lux.

Sitting in the dentist chair, the same thoughts coursed through my mind as I have always had in dentist chairs. The principal thought was: "Well, this is better than being a young man in wartime and having to go over the top." I had started to have such thoughts, you see, at a tender age when men were being sent over the top.

There was nothing much wrong, it seemed, nothing that couldn't be patched up very nicely by stringing me up for from 45 minutes to an hour a couple of times a week to the big McCormick reaper on one side, and the stone-crusher on the other, and then grinding my head between an upper and a nether millstone. The dentist was quite cheerful. Not so very bad, he said, considering how long I hadn't been to see him.

And then as he pecked about in my mouth, looking for trouble, or making it if he failed to find it readily, his face began to change. The cheerful professional manner faded. He really looked frightened. He took a last furtive peep in my mouth, removed his pick and shovel and straightened up. I couldn't imagine what was wrong.

"I hope you don't mind my asking," he said gently, "but have you been tired lately? Have you been sleeping well?"

"Huh?" I grunted in surprise.

His embarrassment increased. "Have you been feeling up to par lately? When did you last see a doctor? That is, do you see a doctor once in a while?" I did not answer that I see a doctor only when I'm conked on the head with a piece of lead pipe and carried to the doctor's office in a sack, and the reason I didn't make some such saucy remark was that I had begun to feel as uncomfortable as my dentist looked.

"Why, what's the matter?" I stammered.

"You ah, ah, have a little anemia, I believe. Now, I'll tell what you do," and those words seemed to steady him—he had a plan, and it had the effect of bringing back a little of his old aplomb—"you go to see your doctor, and then come back to me, and we'll make an appointment to begin on your teeth!"

He heaved a sigh of relief as of one who has a situation under control.

I rose feeling tired, nervous and anemic. I put on my hat at the door when the dentist stopped me.

"Ah, ah, when are you going to see the doctor?"

"Oh, some day next week maybe," I answered airily. I didn't like the way he asked the question.

"Would you mind my suggesting," and once more embarrassment broke over his brow in shining globules of moisture, "that if you could take another hour right now and go to see him?"

"Now?"

"You see," he said, "there are some spots in your mouth—there is a dark unusual spot that I am afraid——" But he couldn't bring himself to say it. He continued unhappily, "It would be better, really, for you to see about it now. It's probably nothing, though. Don't be alarmed."

I found myself on the street walking toward the doctor's office, but I wasn't enjoying the weather. I might as well have been strolling in Spitzbergen or the planet Mars. The distance from one office to the other wasn't great but my walk grew slower and slower until it was hardly more than a crawl. Passers-by began to stare, thinking no doubt that I was the victim of some strange fossilization.

But who would fly to hear the details of a hideous extinction? On that walk I lived through every rare and dread disease from anthrax to zooscopic dementia, from bubonic plague, to xeroderma. I saw myself a menace to society, to be sent to the Louisiana lazaretto.

Living death. I arrived at long last in the doctor's office, wrung in the withers, perspiration streaming from under my hat band.

"Pah," said the doctor, after a quick examination, "nothing wrong with you. I know what he thought," and in his voice I discerned a faint but prickling scorn, "but you haven't any of the other symptoms that always go with it."

The anticlimax was almost overpowering. "Haven't I even got anemia?" I whispered hoarsely. The doctor obligingly looked at one of my eyeballs, practically removing it from the socket to do so. "Oh, it wouldn't do any harm to eat a little red meat now and then," he said carelessly and with an air of dismissal.

Another question rose to my lips, and died there. At the door I turned again and opened my mouth, but the unspoken question once more was becalmed. So I went out in the sunshine and walked to the Trans-Lux.

But some day, in six months or seven, or maybe a year, I shall pluck up my courage and return to the dentist, and I shall ask him boldly by what dread name that thing is known which had me lashed for a brief half hour to the pinions of eternity. ESTHER OBER.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Huey Long's Machine

I DON'T PROFESS to know the whole story of the Louisiana corruption, but I do know that anyone who wants to understand it has got to give up any lingering, wishful notion that Huey Long was a friend of the poor acorn eaters. He was nothing of the kind. He just pretended to be sorry for them and used them for the ordinary, traditional uses of crooked politics. Any rights that they may have had before they decided to throw in with him—and God knows they had few rights—they lost to Huey himself when they placed their confidence in him. The fact that his grave is a political shrine of the poor rural people of Louisiana proves only that he deceived them, not that he loved them.

Huey had friends in national politics and in the newspaper business who admired his brilliant, slapstick humor and emphasized that side of his character by way of condoning his brutality and his utter selfishness. But his faults were too great to be compensated by such virtues, and his brilliance, while it entertained or fascinated persons who were mere onlookers, heightened the menace of Huey Long.

Huey A Champion As Politician

THOSE WHO LOST their rights of citizenship and property trying to preserve the American form of Government in Louisiana did not see the joke when he was being humorous, and they feared his brilliance because it was almost invariably used to destroy freedom.

Those be high-sounding words, but Huey was a bad actor, and if you don't think freedom of speech and the press, the ballot and representative Government were in danger from Huey Long just dig up the record of the laws which he jammed through a Legislature that contained only two free men.

The trouble was that Louisiana politics had been so crooked for so long that it was almost impossible to obtain experienced politicians to oppose him who were not crooks themselves. High-minded amateurs can't fight low-principled professionals, and as a politician Huey was a champion. So the reform element had to enlist anti-Long professionals who were duck soup for him, because he was the best fighter and had the goods on them from past association.

Public Works Seen Loaded With Graft

HE BUILT A LOT of road mileage and bridges, repealed the poll tax, provided free school books and built up the State university, but he also made it unnecessary for any State agency to account for its moneys and impossible for anyone to examine the books. The graft in all his works of building was prodigious, and graft, not public benefit, was the motive; because it went into his machine to build up his power. Then he ballyhooed these improvements as gifts from Huey Long.

He had been elected Governor and Senator under the old, rotten poll-tax system, but when the tax was repealed Huey passed other laws permitting him to buy enough votes at $5 each to swing any district in which he perceived a contest and charge the cost to the taxpayers. So repeal of the poll tax meant nothing to the emancipated. But Huey got credit for a noble deed.

Anybody who opposed him to a troublesome extent would be picked up by his cops for traffic violations, overtaxed, fired from his job, placed under a business boycott or persecuted through his relatives as Hitler tortures the relatives of refugees who speak against him. His secret police were political terrorists.

Grafting Machine Now Falls Apart

IT WAS HUEY who created the grafting machine which is now falling apart in Louisiana, and all the crooks involved in the thievery on pipe lines, oil, dummy bonds and State buildings were men of Huey's own kind, selected by him because they were crooks. Even in the university, where you might think that he might have had a heart and let the kids study in peace, students were discriminated against in their marks and privileges if they or members of their families were out of line politically.

And now we read that under Dick Leche's reign as Governor members of the university faculty were required to revise or withdraw published opinions on the prosperity of Louisiana which deflated the ballyhoo printed in Leche's paper, which was fat with ads from contractors, municipalities and even charity hospitals and insane asylums.

Huey closed a gambling house once with great righteousness, but the reason was that the gambling house ran a night club and floor show which was draining business out of a hotel night club operated by one of his gang. He didn't have an honest motive or humane impulse in anything he ever did, and his machine was no worse when the trouble came recently than it was in his day, but just less clever.

Understanding this about Huey's character and operations, you can go on from here, but if you persist in thinking of him as a friend of the oppressed or of anyone but Huey P. Long you will never get the hang of the story.

Immigration Backlog Piles Up

Central European Nations' Quotas Filled For 25 To 30 Years

By Andrue Berding
Associated Press Staff Writer

A wave of immigration is piling up behind the dams of the United States immigration act as panic-stricken hundreds of thousands flee from the fact or fear of racial persecution in central Europe and from the shadow of war.

Immigration quotas from some countries are filled for hopeless numbers of years. From Hungary, for instance, an applicant for an American immigration visa, although accepted as such, may have to wait a quarter of a century, or more, before entering the United States. Quotas which in recent years were far from being filled now are over-applied tens of times.

The countries whose backlog of applicants under the immigration quotas are piled especially high are all in central Europe and are all affected by some form or threat of anti-Semitism. They are Germany, Czecho-Slovakia (the old Czecho-slovakia which has been absorbed by Germany but whose quota has not yet been merged with that of Germany), Hungary, Poland and Rumania.

Quota Filled For 30 Years

Although the German quota is 27,370 per year, 298,000 applicants for quota visas had registered at American consulates at the end of the fiscal year, June 30. On the face of it, this would mean that the German quota is already filled for 11 years to come. But about half the applicants, or more, are rejected on physical, mental or other grounds. Even so, the quota is filled for over five years to come.

In Poland the applicants now number 114,000, compared to a quota of only 6,524. However, the percentage of rejected applications from Poland is higher than from Germany.

The most pitiful situation perhaps of all exists in Hungary, where 30,000 have applied under an annual quota of only 869. It is rendered all the more difficult because the Hungarians have a smaller percentage of rejections than almost any other country. At the present rate it will take from 25 to 30 years to exhaust the eligible applications now on the rolls.

51,000 Czechs Seek Entry

Prior to and following Hitler's occupation of Czecho-Slovakia there was a rush of visa applicants to the American consulates so that, at the end of June, 51,000 persons were on the lists, with a quota of only 2,874. Perhaps 15 years may be necessary to exhaust the present backlog.

Rumania has the smallest quota among these nations with large Jewish populations, and yet its backlog of applications is, in proportion, among the highest. Against a quota of only 377 there are already 19,000 applications.

One curious development is that the rush has also started from Russia. The quota for that country is 2,700 but the applications now number 11,000. A large number of these, however, are from Russians who live outside Russia.

Immigration Overbalance

Indications that may be drawn from the huge backlogs, which probably will still be greatly augmented, are these:

Immigration from central Europe, which was well under the quota for those countries for some years, will now completely fill those quotas.

Proportionately, this immigration will overbalance the immigration from other parts of Europe and thus run counter to the intentions of the fathers of the immigration act of 1924, who desired that the majority of immigrants should come from Great Britain and Ireland and arranged by quotas that it should be so. Last year Germany alone sent us the majority of all our immigrants.

This overbalance from central Europe will probably continue for many years because of the backlogs of those countries and because of the fact that the quotas from Great Britain and Ireland, Belgium, France, Holland, Switzerland and Scandinavia are far from being filled.

Simians Use Rake, Upset Theory

Monkeys have been trained to use eight rakes placed at different distances from the cage to get their food, a Columbia University professor announced yesterday.

The tests reveal that animals used tools before man or even the higher apes evolved, and reverses the previous belief, it was reported by Dr. Carl J. Warden, associate professor of psychology.

Dr. Warden added that "it was found that the New World monkeys learned far more quickly than those from the Old World . . . This difference of ability is significant because it is from the Old World monkeys that the higher apes and man evolved."

How to Torture Your Wife

Books And Things

By William Soskin

DESCRIBING William Blake's earlier novel, "The World Is Mine," Louis Untermeyer with the best of intentions called it a dynamo on the loose. That seems an unwise situation for a dynamo, but Mr. Blake's new novel, "The Painter and the Lady" (Simon and Schuster, $2.50) suggests that the author is still a tremendously dynamic fellow, his book bursting with energy and power and most of it still on the loose.

The new book has the same emulation of the best of Duma's writing which made itself apparent in the first novel, but this time the story concerns the development of an artist's temperament in relation to a modern world of economic unrest, social injustice and commercial exploitation. It attempts to marry the melodramatic exploits and the high romance of a group of merchant princes in the wine-growing country of southern France to a subtle drama of esthetic development. It attempts further to bless that marriage with a large social message in the best French United Front tradition and to consummate the nuptials in as hot a series of amatory incidents as you may find outside the erotica departments of the second-hand book stores.

Add to that Mr. Blake's astonishing technical knowledge of the trade and financial methods in which he involves his great commercial houses, his vivid knowledge of French geography and of the anthropological details of each village and his smooth and knowing, if not profound, familiarity with the arts of painting and music—and you have a notion of the flashing variety and the gaudy virtuosity of his novel.

THE TWO BROTHERS who may be regarded as the joint protagonists of "The Painter and the Lady" are Stephane and Onesime Sabatier, of a modest family in the home city of the elaborate Renouvier clan, a wealthy family of wine growers. Onesime marries the bourgeois daughter of the Renouviers and becomes, with her a defender of the standards and ethics of individual capitalism, but not before he has had something of a fling as an artist and a Bohemian lover, wandering about the countryside in the best picaresque fashion. Stephane, on the other hand, starts out with no such dilettante and arty notions. He goes straight into the thick of the wine growers' and exporters' trade, building a sensational if brief career for himself in competition with the most ruthless mobs and cutthroats in the business, pitting his wits against the modern buccaneers who make the more romantic pirates of an earlier day seem childish and innocent.

It isn't long before Stephane has had his belly full of this financial swashbuckling and then we have the strange situation of his turning to art while his brother deserts it for the easier pursuit of business. Therein lies the most significant meaning of Mr. Blake's book, a device whereby he pours out his scorn for the frivolous, "esthetic" practitioners of art as an escape from life and demonstrates the fact that a wholesome, intelligent, vital understanding, whether it be applied to business or to art, as in the case of Stephane, is something more than a pleasant exercise of the esthetic function. In Stephane he creates something of a Goya, a man whose art is organically related to the impulses and dreams of all humanity, who paints ugliness and reality as well as the pastel forms of beauty.

More than that, Mr. Blake seems to demonstrate a thesis that was recently well expressed by Andre Malraux in one of his essays on esthetics. True art, Malraux holds, does not spring from a mere consumption of experience and a wholesale accumulation of life in the raw. It is only when the sense of form and the artist's perspective on life precedes such experience that life as such contributes to his art. Onesime Sabatier might have rubbed elbows with people and made love to countless women for the rest of his days and he would not have emerged an artist. Stephane had understanding and a sense of form even when he was a trader.

A dominating figure in Mr. Blake's book is the daughter of a small farmer in Arles, Simone Lamouroux, a girl flowing over with the spirit, the beauty, the lusty appetites and the iconoclastic intelligence of the proletarian women of her type in France. First the sweetheart of Onesime, she sends him packing for his sentimental churlishness and inadequacy and for the falseness of his artistic creed through which she easily can see. Then, by a circumstantial twist which we must forgive the author, Simone becomes the mistress of Stephane and all her talent for love and her boundless energy find release and a heroic sort of realization. Their affair progresses through an ordeal of self-searching and doubt, and through an ecstatic emotional flight, until it reaches an ultimate tragedy when Stephane is tried for the murder of a Jewish commercial magnate, a crime he did not commit. It is only when Mr. Blake permits himself little orgies of amatory detail and exhibitionist flights of boudoir fancy that he seems to me to damage the value of his love story. He is given to describing women's feelings and physical habits with a masculine rather than feminine pleasure, and he often seems slightly adolescent in his depicting of detail in love affairs, as though he expects the facts to shock or surprise ordinary people less sophisticated than himself.

A REPORT on "The Painter and the Lady" should not fail to indicate the wealth of incident in the book, the stabbings and seductions, the elopements and journeys, the civic banquets of the owners of brothels, the strikers and parades and, most important, the travelogue nature of the author's flight to the fascinating landscapes in the French countryside. It should also suggest, I am afraid, that the story's alliance with the Communists and the masses of France is a clumsy one, in which the workers stalk about in saintly white raiment while the capitalists flaunt their satanic red costumes. The proletarian ideals, as they are expressed in this novel, seem close to the revolution of the eighteenth century rather than to modern social programs, and Mr. Blake confines his preachment to a general support of abstract justice. Indeed, the entire book, for all its mention of contemporary events and people like Leon Blum, carries a distinct flavor of nineteenth century historical romance and one is often shocked to recall that the characters are not in costume. That is due to the ceremony and the flamboyance of Mr. Blake's prose style.

Appropriately, there is no suggestion of ceremony or literary flamboyance in James McConnaughey's novel, "Stephen Ayres" (Farrar & Rinehart, $2.50), since it concerns itself unpretentiously with a middle-class community that is striving in the welter of today's industrial struggle to sustain a native culture.

Off The Record

Roosevelt's 'Challenge'

By Mark Sullivan

An Irritated Attitude

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT consciously, almost with deliberate ostentation, gives the country his state of mind about the departure of Congress from doing what he asked. It is an irritated state of mind. He might have done differently. He might have moved toward conciliation of Congress—or at least, by silence, permitted time to bring conciliation.

His attitude is one of challenge. He asserts that Congress, by not doing what he asked, has invited consequences damaging to the country. He says he hopes these damaging consequences won't happen. But he must know that if the consequences do not happen he will be left in the position of a disappointed Cassandra. He need hardly be resentful if some of the cynical wonder whether Mr. Roosevelt would feel the greater disappointment through the consequences not happening, and thereby making his warnings empty, or through the consequences happening, and thereby justifying him.

His first assertion is that if war comes in Europe, it will bring consequences to America which Mr. Roosevelt could have averted, had Congress given him the neutrality measure he asked. Refusal to give that measure to Mr. Roosevelt was by a vote of 159 to 157 in the House, and a vote of 12 to 11 in the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

Roosevelt Lost By Small Margin

THAT IS, in both cases, Mr. Roosevelt lost by the reluctance of extremely small groups of men, a margin of two in one body, one in the other. These small margins were accounted for by men who had just one feeling about the President, a feeling that he, through temperamental impetuosity, might use the measure in a way that would work to America's detriment. This feeling need hardly have been entertained. It is far-fetched to suppose that Mr. Roosevelt, with his exceptionally prudent and sure-footed Secretary of State, would have made any unwise use of the neutrality measure both asked for.

Nevertheless, Mr. Roosevelt has no great justification for his present attitude that if war comes and America suffers disadvantage, Congress will be responsible. There is nothing that can happen in Europe that cannot be quickly and adequately met, if necessary by a special session of Congress. About possible war in Europe, and its possible detriment to America, the difference between what Congress did, and what it might have done, need give no serious concern to the country.

About Mr. Roosevelt's other attitude, there is greater occasion for concern. About the refusal of Congress to give Mr. Roosevelt the money he asked, Mr. Roosevelt is contentious. His attitude is that this money would have brought business recovery; that if recovery does not come it will be because of the lack of this money. And that if this happens, Congress will be responsible and Mr. Roosevelt justified.

Lack Of Recovery Will Justify Him

THE PRESIDENT puts himself in a position in which he says that lack of business recovery will be justification for him. That, of course, is much short of hoping for the lack of recovery. On the contrary, Mr. Roosevelt says that he hopes it will turn out that Congress was right, that his warning will turn out a false alarm.

Yet, if Mr. Roosevelt in his position as President, with great power to influence the course of business can preserve a distinction between wishing for personal justification and wishing for business recovery—if the President can preserve that self-denying distinction, is he sure that all his subordinates can?

Throughout the Administration, there is post after post, agency after agency, that can do much to promote business recovery, or by another line of policy, fail to promote it, even deter it. Which course will the President's subordinates think is more to the liking of the President, more to his political advantage? Some of these men have a low opinion of the American structure of business. Repeatedly, in the more radical circles of the New Deal, one observes an attitude which asks if the system of privately owned business is really worth saving. If not among New Deal officials, there is among some New Deal supporters an attitude going so far as probably to look with great tolerance on failure of the system of privately owned business as a reason for substituting a system they would prefer.

Good Sportsmanship Would Aid Revival

TO SUCH PERSONS, encouragement may be given by the President's present attitude, which in effect says to Congress, and by inference to business: "I dare you to show me if business can recover."

America needs recovery, desperately. The President, by official action and by mental attitude, can greatly encourage recovery. An affirmative, hopeful, encouraging attitude on his part might make the difference between recovery and the lack of it.

There is no material reason why he should not give recovery his blessing and active help. With a few exceptions, he has got the reforms he tried for. If ever there was a time when there was justification on his part for postponing recovery until he got Congress to accept his reforms, that time has passed. No material part of Congress has any wish to destroy any of his reforms, nor touch them, otherwise than to make them workable.

For Mr. Roosevelt to take an attitude of strongly facilitating recovery would be good sportsmanship in acceptance of the outcome of his controversy with Congress. And it would be the greatest possible service he could do the country at this time.

Cold Anschluss

The Danzig Crisis Nears A Climax

EUROPE appears to be on the eve of a new Danzig crisis. The strong speech made by Marshal Smigly-Rydz at Cracow last Sunday, in which the man who wears the mantle of the late Josef Pilsudski voiced Poland's determination to retain Danzig as the "lung of Polish economic life" has aroused a violent echo in the German press.

Hitler's journalistic mouthpieces vie with each other in accusing the Warsaw government and Polish newspapers of "criminal war agitation," and "brazen provocation." With one voice they charge Poland with plotting a preventive war against the Third Reich and threaten that nation with extinction should it continue the stand it does on the Danzig issue.

"The first shot from a Polish gun," said the Lokal-Anzeiger of Berlin, "will in our eyes be sufficient cause to give Poland an answer the letters of which will represent the concluding sentence of present Polish history."

WHAT IS the purpose of this campaign of vituperation which bears so striking a resemblance to the attacks made by the Nazis on Czecho-Slovakia last summer and again on the eve of the fateful ides of March?

The obvious purpose, of course, is to intimidate Poland and the Poles into abandoning Danzig to the Third Reich. So far this effort has failed. And there is every reason to believe that it will continue to fail. If anything the barrage laid down by Dr. Goebbels against Poland is more likely to infuriate the Poles than to frighten them.

But there is another and quite different reason for the latest and most virulent outburst of bitterness against the Poles. Should it prove impossible to win Danzig without a war and should Hitler decide that he must have the Free City anyway, public opinion in Germany must be prepared for that eventuality. The Germans must be made to believe that if war comes it is not the Third Reich but Poland which is the aggressor.

THIS DOES NOT mean that Hitler has definitely decided that he now has no alternative but to go to war. But it does mean that the Fuehrer is not ignoring the fact that if he does decide to fight, the German people must be psychologically conditioned automatically to accept that decision as wise and inevitable.

In this connection the preparations made in Danzig itself over a long period of time have an especial pertinence.

Since the fall of 1937, when the last non-Nazi party gave up the ghost, the Free City has been in all but two particulars an integral part of the Third Reich, being ruled from Berlin fully as much as is Munich or Koenigsberg or Bremen. The government, the press, the schools have all been Nazified. The Nuremberg laws are being applied with the same rigor against the Jews of Danzig as they are being applied against the Jews of Germany. The Danzig Constitution, guaranteed by the League of Nations, has become a worthless scrap of paper.

WHERE DANZIG differs from the cities directly under Hitler's rule is, first, that it is within the Polish customs zone and, secondly, and far more important, that it is at least nominally disarmed.

As long as it is disarmed, that is as long as it is not transformed into a military, naval and air base, in the hands of a hostile power, it constitutes no threat to the political security or economic independence of Poland. Were it so transformed and that would happen following incorporation in the Reich, Danzig would be a noose around Poland's neck with the loose ends held in Berlin.

In other words, the problem of Danzig is, basically, neither political nor economic but military. As a Nazi newspaper in the Free City accurately described it last June, Danzig is a "key position indispensable to Germany." For once Danzig goes, Poland goes, and if Poland goes the last barrier to German domination in eastern Europe is destroyed.

UNTIL NOW the obvious aim of the Nazis has been to achieve a "cold Anschluss"—i. e., bloodless union between Danzig and the Third Reich. The means employed have been a succession of measures designed to whittle away Polish rights and interests in the Free City. If this process succeeds, the actual proclamation of Danzig's incorporation in Germany will be merely the statement of an accomplished fact.

To this end there has been, during the past five months, an increasing number of acts of aggression against Poles and private Polish interests in the Free City and more recently against Polish government establishments and Polish officials, principally customs inspectors. At the same time arms, munitions and implements of war have been smuggled into the Free City and a steady infiltration of storm troopers and others belonging to Nazi military formations has taken place.

Danzig today is an armed camp. The unanswered question is whether it is sufficiently of an armed camp to make possible a measure of resistance should there be a declaration of Anschluss with Germany by the Danzig Senate and should Poland intervene with military force to restore the status quo. In that case Germany might seize upon this action as a pretext to intervene on her own account, in the meantime charging Poland with aggression. Thus in accusing the Warsaw government of plotting a preventive war, the Nazi press is taking a long look ahead.

Diesel's Principle Used by Primitives

A primitive forerunner of the Diesel engine—a fire-lighting gadget of the Malayans, was developed centuries before the principle, of high compression ignition German engineers have discovered, the Smithsonian Institution reported yesterday.

The gadget, which is a fire piston, is described by some ethnologists as the most remarkable of primitive inventions, it was pointed out. The invention was by an unknown Malay, or probably a development over several generations, and its use spread through the Malay peninsula and the East Indies at least 1,000 years in advance of the German engineers.

The piston consists of a tightly wrapped plunger which is forced into a wooden cylinder at the bottom of which is placed a bit of tinder. The plunger, hit by hand, compresses the air beneath it and generates sufficient heat to light the tinder. The Malays then take out this tinder, fan it into flame and use it to start a fire.

Mercer, The Steer

1. Mercer was a prize steer. He had class and beauty. He got into the roto sections and the newsreels. But he wasn't happy.

2. Day by day Mercer looked sadder and sadder. He seemed ever so wistful. It was finally thought his outlook needed broadening. "What Mercer needs is a look at the World of Tomorrow," said somebody. And so they took him to the World's Fair.

3. Arriving there, he was given quite a reception: But Mercer just looked around listlessly. "Look! See the pretty Trylon!" said his attendant. Mercer just yawned. "Over there is the General Motors Building!" said the attendant. "You are in the presence of the Futurama." Mercer sat down and looked very tired.

4. The World's Fair Committee heard about it and were furious. Something had to be done. So they called out the brass bands and escorted him to the Court of Peace and let him look in the lagoon. Mercer fell asleep. It was very embarrassing.

5. "We must send for Mayor LaGuardia at once!" said a third vice president of the Fair. "What can LaGuardia do when a steer just isn't interested?" asked some one.

"Mercer had better get interested when Fiorello shows up, or else," said the third v. p.

6. Presently Mayor LaGuardia arrived in a police car, carrying a spade, a couple of gavels and a microphone. "Get me a steam shovel," commanded the mayor.

"You don't dedicate a steer with a steam shovel," said a committeeman.

"Throw that man out!" ordered the mayor.

"You can't throw anybody out of this fair," said a committeeman. "We're having trouble enough getting people to come in."

7. Suddenly the mayor threw the wrong lever or something and the steam shovel stung Mercer between the Hall of Medicine and the British Pavilion. With a loud scream Mercer leaped into the air, turned a few somersaults and cavorted about the mall, the very spirit of excitement. There hadn't been anything like that since the fair opened.

8. Mercer leaped and danced madly. The crowds cheered. It seemed that the fair had found a super-attraction. "Send for Mr. Whalen!" commanded an executive. "He will be tickled about this."

9. Mr. Whalen leaped into his special reception clothes and came at once. "What a break! This is wonderful!" exclaimed Mr. Whalen. Presently Mercer stopped dead. He looked at Grover as if entranced.

He sniffed the air.

He licked his chops.

He came coyly to Grover's side and ate his gardenia!

10. Then Mercer sighed heavily, rolled over several times in a tulip bed, gurgled and said: "I wish I had an ice cream cone. Strawberry would be nice."

Mercer did not get his ice cream cone. At a signal from Mr. Whalen he was seized by rude hands and given the bum's rush. The fair settled back into its stride. Mr. Whalen hurried back to the Administration Building. You never can tell about flowers.

Ferdinand was a fool for daisies. And Mercer liked gardenias.

Every time we think the disarmament program is making some headway in America, along comes a Kentucky primary.

A man was fined $10 for sitting on the subway tracks in New York the other day. It's getting so a man can't have any fun anywhere any more.

Engagement Announced at Dinner Party On Gibson Island, Where Both Families Have Homes; Ceremony to Take Place Sept. 9

By Dudley Harmon

Of interest to Capital society or what's left of it here these dog days—is the announcement by Mr. and Mrs. John Laughlin Williamson, of Clearwater, Fla., and Gibson Island, Md., of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Cynthia Anne Williamson, to Hugh Douglas Wise, jr., of Princeton, N. J., and Washington.

The engagement was made known at a family dinner given last night by Mr. and Mrs. Williamson at their summer home at the smart Maryland resort. Col. and Mrs. Hugh D. Wise, parents of the prospective bridegroom, also have a summer residence on the island, but call Princeton their official home. Both families were present at last night's dinner party.

The young couple has set September 9 as the date for the wedding, which will take place at Gibson Island. The day falls on a Saturday, which will allow the many Washington friends of Miss Williamson and Mr. Wise to motor down for the event. As few houses in the Maryland resort are large enough for a reception, the ceremony will be held at the smart Gibson Island Club, and is scheduled for 3:30 o'clock. After a honeymoon the couple will make their home in Washington, where Mr. Wise is associated with the staff of the General Counsel of the Securities and Exchange Commission. He and his future bride will both have several attendants at the wedding, but the list is not yet definitely completed.

Bride-to-Be Studied at Pine Manor

Pretty Miss Williamson is a graduate of the Roycemore School in Evanston, Ill., and also studied at Pine Manor Junior College in Wellesley, Mass. Mr. Wise was graduated in 1932 from Princeton and received his masters degree from that university the following year. He continued his studies at the Yale University Law School, from which he was graduated in 1936. He then came to Washington to work for the Securities and Exchange Commission, and for the past year or so has occupied one of Miss Janet Fish's charming little Georgetown houses along with Sherlock Davis and one or two other bachelors who work in the alphabetical agencies.

Mr. Davis and Mr. Wise gave up the house last month, and since that time the prospective bridegroom has been living with his family at Gibson Island, commuting to work each day. The present address of Mr. Davis is the Metropolitan Club.

Miss Buckwalter Fiancee of Mr. Bell

With Washington practically deserted, socially speaking, engagements and weddings are making all the news there is these days. Another betrothal of interest here is that of Miss Florence Kathleen Buckwalter, daughter of Mrs. Abram Irvin Buckwalter of Beekman Place, New York, to George Tillman Bell, jr., of Washington. Announcement was made recently by the mother of the bride-to-be.

Miss Buckwalter was graduated from Principia College in St. Louis and continued her studies at the Sorbonne in Paris and at Columbia University. Mr. Bell was graduated from the Friends School here and in 1934 from Lehigh University. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George T. Bell.

The young couple has selected September 22 as the date of the ceremony, which will take place at Christ Church in New York.

The Sayres Sail Next Month

Francis B. Sayre, recently sworn in as United States High Commissioner to the Philippines, will sail with Mrs. Sayre about the middle of September for his new post. Mrs. Sayre and their children are at Marthas Vineyard, where Mr. Sayre hopes to join them later this month for a brief vacation before leaving for the West Coast, where they will embark.

Also sailing shortly for Manila are Mr. and Mrs. Golden Bell. Mr. Bell, formerly Assistant Attorney General, has been named Financial Assistant to the High Commissioner.

Yesterday Mrs. Bell was honored at a farewell luncheon given by Mrs. Walter Wyatt. The other guests were Senora de Pastoriza, wife of the Dominican Minister; Mrs. Harllee Branch, Mrs. Emil Schram, Mrs. Bulkley Griffin, Mrs. Ernest Davenport, Mrs. Horace Dawson, Mrs. Flavelle Koss and Mrs. Neitah King.

Yugoslav Minister Reaches U. S. Today

The Minister of Yugoslavia, Constantin Fotitch, will return to New York today on the liner Rex after a vacation in his homeland. He will be met at the boat by Dr. Vladimir Rybar, Counselor of the legation, and they will come directly to Washington.

Mme. Fotitch and their young daughter, Pola, are remaining in Yugoslavia until the autumn. They spent the earlier part of the summer at Rehoboth.

Mary Sturdevant Touring Europe With 2 Friends

Although Lieut. Col. and Mrs. E. W. Sturdevant are spending the entire summer in hot Washington, they are enjoying a regular European travelogue, thanks to the letters of their daughter, Miss Mary Alice Sturdevant. She is making an extensive tour abroad and writes to her parents a daily diary of her adventures.

With two of her fellow students at Bryn Mawr, Miss Sturdevant is visiting the youth hostels in Denmark and the Scandinavian countries. The trio travels on bicycles and shares picnic lunches in the open. Miss Sturdevant, who made her debut here two years ago, will not return until mid-September, and will resume her Bryn Mawr studies next year.

The H. D. Frooms To See Both Fairs

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Dewey Froom are on their honeymoon, a trip which will include the New York World's Fair as well as the San Francisco Exposition, following their wedding here last Friday.

The marriage of the former Miss Hallie Burbank Taylor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George P. Taylor, took place at the First Baptist Church in Arlington, Va., with the Rev. Perry L. Mitchell officiating. Palms, gladioli and ferns adorned the church for the ceremony.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a white flowered organdy frock and a finger tip length veil. She carried a bouquet of gardenias.

Miss Katherine Taylor, sister of the bride, attended as maid of honor. She wore a peach organda frock with a matching bonnet of starched lace. Her arm bouquet was of gladioli and delphinium.

John Lippy, jr., attended as best man and ushers were the bride's brother, George P. Taylor, jr., and Ralph Richards.

The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Laura Brown, of Daly, Calif.

Women of Moose To Receive Priest

The Rev. Pasquale Ferrara will attend a meeting of the Women of the Moose to be held tomorrow evening at their local headquarters. The Rev. Mr. Ferrara, a Mooseheart graduate, is in Washington attending classes at Catholic University.

Miss Alice Farris and Charles Shepherdson, of this city, both Mooseheart graduates, will receive Father Ferrara and introduce him to members of the fraternity.

His theological training was received at the North American College, Rome, Italy. He was ordained a priest in Rome and returned to this country to celebrate his first solemn high mass at Mooseheart. Father Ferrara is known to the Moose fraternity as the first Mooseheart graduate ever to become a priest.

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Holland, of 1806 Ingleside Terrace announce the marriage of their daughter, Helen Alease, to James Patrick Leach, jr., of Beverly Hills, Calif., August 5 in Baltimore.

Mr. Leach, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James P. Leach, is a graduate of Georgetown University Law School. Mrs. Leach attended Roosevelt High School.

Miss Weigert Becomes Bride Of L. F. Frick

Reception Follows Ceremony; Couple On Trip to New York

The marriage of Miss Catherine Louise Weigert and Louis F. Frick took place yesterday morning at 10 o'clock at St. Gabriels Church with the Rev. William J. Sweeney officiating. Palms and white gladioli adorned the church.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred Weigert, and Mr. Frick is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Frick.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white net gown ending in a sweeping train. It was sprinkled with rosettes of lace and the neckline was heart-shaped. Her tulle veil fell from a coronet of lilies of the valley. She carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Robert Blair and Mrs. Gerard Erickson, sisters of the bride, were her only attendants. Mrs. Blair's frock of blue marquisette was made in redingote style. Mrs. Erickson wore a frock of dusty pink sheer made in the same manner. They wore matching veils held in place by crowns of flowers and carried pink roses and blue delphinium.

Miss Janet Bramhall, wearing a white organdy frock trimmed in pink and blue ribbons, served as flower girl. She carried a basket of rose petals which she scattered before the bride as she walked down the aisle.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents on Webster street. Mrs. Weigert had chosen a blue gown and a large white picture hat for the occasion. The bridegroom's mother wore a frock of printed chiffon.

Among the out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. James Murphy and their daughter, Katherine, and Miss Lou Schuler and Miss Annamae Schuler, all of Baltimore.

The bride is a graduate of Holy Cross College. Mr. Frick attended Georgetown Law School.

Reilly-Slater Wedding Today

In a quiet ceremony in New York this afternoon, Miss Jane Slater, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Slater, of this city, will become the bride of Hugh Reilly, jr., also of Washington, and son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Reilly.

The wedding, witnessed by only a few intimate friends and the immediate family, will take place at 6 o'clock in the Eglise de Notre Dame.

Following the ceremony a small reception will be held at the Essex House.

After a trip to Saratoga Springs, where they will take in a few days of racing, the bride and bridegroom will sail for Jamaica.

They will be at home after October 1 in Tilden Gardens.

Mrs. Dougherty Is Hostess at Westport Home

Mrs. John Allan Dougherty, of Washington, who has been at her Westport, Conn., home, Little Cedars, since early summer, has as her guests there for a few days Miss Hazel Edgar and Mrs. Mary MacCracken Jones, of this city.

Miss Edgar joined Miss Jones there last week-end after spending three weeks in New York on business. The two are planning to start soon an a motor trip to Provincetown and Gloucester, Mass., probably continuing on to Vermont and New Hampshire. Later they may drop in on Senator and Mrs. Peter Goelet Gerry, who are resting at a New England "hideout."

Mary Jessie Pearce Becomes Bride of James G. Johnson

Father of Bridegroom and Rector Of Chevy Chase Baptist Church Officiate; Couple to Live in New England

At a ceremony yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock in the flower-decked Chevy Chase Baptist Church, Miss Mary Jessie Pearce, daughter of Mrs. Sidney H. Pearce and the late Mr. Pearce, became the bride of James Glover Johnson, of Mount Hermon, Mass. The Rev. Allison J. Johnson, of Cornelia, Ga., father of the bridegroom, and the Rev. Edward O. Clark, rector of the church, officiated in a setting of palms, ferns, and tall baskets of white asters, gladioli and Easter lilies.

The bride was escorted to the altar by Earl Worden Chafee, of New York, and was given in marriage by her mother. Her gown of white lace over satin was fashioned with a tight bodice and full skirt, and a close-fitting lace jacket and peplum completed the costume. Her long tulle veil was held in place by orange blossoms and a coronet of handmade lace and seed pearls which had been on a gown in her mothers trousseau and was also worn by her sister, Mrs. Kenneth Forbes, at her wedding. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley, orchids and maiden hair fern tied with wide white satin ribbon.

Two Sisters Attend Bride

Her attendants were her two sisters, Mrs. Forbes, matron of honor, and Miss Esther Pearce, maid of honor. They were gowned alike in apple green point d'esprit over taffeta, and wore white leghorn garden hats with velvet ribbons to match their gowns. They carried arm bouquets of white asters, shasta daisies and fern tied with white tulle.

Mr. Johnson had as his best man Kenneth B. Forbes, brother-in-law of the bride, and the ushers were Willis Rudolph Adams and A. Winston Marshall.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride. The house was decorated with white flowers and ferns and the mantel before which the receiving line stood was banked with greens and covered with a long centerpiece of white gladioli and asters. The wedding cake was made from a recipe in a cook book with which the bride's grandmother had started housekeeping.

Assisting at the reception were Mrs. Wilford White, Mrs. William R. Bolten, the Misses Elizabeth and Irma Hughes, Ella Fraser and Maude Forbes, Mrs. Hugh Murell and Mrs. Willis Adams.

Mrs. Pearce, the bride's mother, wore white chiffon and a white straw hat. The bridegroom's mother was in Ming Toy crepe, with a white hat and corsage of gardenias.

Couple to Live At Mount Hermon

The bride studied at the University of Chattanooga and George Washington University. She is a P. E. O., a member of Phi Delta Gama, of which she is national treasurer, of the Woman's Club of Chevy Chase, and the American Association of University Women. Her great-grandfather was William Wallis, of Alabama, a captain in the Confederate Army, and through her father she is a direct descendant of the pilgrim, John Howland, whose house at Plymouth, Mass., is an historic shrine.

Mr. Johnson is a graduate of Mercer University in Macon, Ga., the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, Ky., and received his Ph. D. degree from Yale. For the past three years he has been a professor at the Mount Hermon School for Boys, Mount Hermon, Mass.

Among out-of-town guests at the wedding were Mrs. Allison Johnson, the bridegroom's mother; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Smith, of Port Washington, L. I., Miss Virginia Bazile, of Elmont, Va., Miss Virginia Pearce, of Tallapoosa, Ga., a cousin of the bride, and the Rev. J. George Butler, of New Haven, Conn.

After a month at the Meredith Inn, Meredith, N. Y., the couple will be at home in Mount Hermon. As her going away costume the bride wore a navy blue crepe ensemble with touches of white and wine color and a navy blue taffeta hat.

Mr. Breese Bridal Usher

William L. Breese, of Washington, will be an usher at the wedding September 15 in Garrison, N. Y., of Miss Susan Kean Cutler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Wilson Cutler, of Garrison and New York City, to Richard Chanler Aldrich. The birde-to-be is a niece of Representative Hamilton Fish and Mr. Breese is a nephew.

The ceremony will take place in the afternoon at the Church of St. Philips-in-the-Highlands, and will be followed by a reception at the Cutler country home. The Misses Patricia Rosalind and Judith Bayard Cutler will serve as maids of honor for their sister and the other attendants will be Mrs. Chirstopher T. E. Rand, of Ross, Calif., a sister of Mr. Aldrich; Miss Jane Cheney, of Winnetka, Ill., whose engagement to John W. Cutler, jr., has just been announced; the Misses Jessie H. Leonard, Marian S. Gray, Polly Potts and Camilla W. Moss, all of New York.

Warren Delano will be best man for Mr. Aldrich, who is the son of Mrs. Richard Aldrich Washington, and the late Mr. Aldrich. Besides Mr. Breese, the other ushers include John Wilson Cutler, jr., and Peter S. Cutler, brothers of the bride-elect; Robert Hoguet, jr., William A. Chanler, jr., and Vernon Munroe, jr., all of New York; N. Penrose Hallowell, jr., William McKennan, F. Fessenden Wilder and Dr. Eugene Record, of Boston, and Christopher T. E. Rand.

Admiral Courtney And the Tittmanns Sail for Europe

Rear Admiral Charles E. Courtney, who has been named commander of the Mediterranean squadron of the United States fleet, sailed yesterday on the liner Washington for Europe. He and Mrs. Courtney spent a few days at the St. Regis in New York.

Also on the Washington are Mr. and Mrs. Harold Tittmann, jr., who are going to Geneva, where the former has been assigned by the State Department.

Coast Trip Planned By Mrs. Cumming

Mrs. Hugh Cumming, jr., will leave August 27 by train for California, where she will spend a month with an aunt at the family ranch in Stockton. Her weekends she will spend with her mother, Mrs. Frank West, of Washington, who has a house at Woodside for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Cumming are in town for most of the hot season, having returned last month from a visit to Holland and England. Mr. Cumming also toured the Scandinavian countries and was a guest in Oslo of Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, United States Minister to Norway.

Suzanne Unger Betrothed To J. Albert Lahnstein

Announcement has been made of the engagement of Miss Suzanne N. Unger, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. James S. Unger, of New York, to J. Albert Lahnstein, son of Mrs. Cecil M. Lahnstein and the late Mr. Lahnstein.

Miss Unger attended Montmorency College in Paris and the Fairmont School in Washington. Her fiance studied at Columbia University and is now with the importing firm of Julius Wile Sons & Co., Inc.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Potatoes and Milk Often Overstressed As Fattening Foods; Pastry Is More So

TO THE OVERWEIGHT reducing is all too likely to mean giving up something. The woman who particularly likes potatoes, wistfully gives them up. The one who likes bread and butter gives up bread. She takes the butter on something else. Every overweight seems steadfastly resolved that milk is fattening and that her only hope lies in renouncing it forever.

I could scarcely believe my ears not long ago when an overweight who had refused potatoes, but was light-heartedly enjoying a four-inch wedge of pie for dessert, looked askance at my glass of milk. "But," she protested, "isn't milk fattening?"

She could have had one medium-size potato and, baked in its skin, it would have furnished valuable mineral salts, and with an average size pat of butter it would not have counted more than 200 calories. One glass of unskimmed milk would have enriched her menu with vitamins A and B and the minerals calcium and phosphorus, and one glass of milk is only 160 calories.

Pastries Add Weight

But she had pie, which is mostly fats and carbohydrates. One inch of pie counts 100 calories. Since she had consumed her full quota of calories in the main course, the 400 calories in pie were extra, and meant about one-tenth pound more weight.

I wouldn't come out flat-footedly and say it is not a good idea to cut down on certain foods. It is, provided it is part of a plan to cut down the total calorie intake. Unless you take less than the number of calories required for the day, you cannot possibly lose weight.

Under the circumstances it is difficult to understand why a few foods never live down their reputation for being weight makers. You probably couldn't eat enough of one food for it to make you fat! Most avoirdupois can be traced to pastries and similar high fat, high carbohydrate foods, but even these cannot make you gain unless they are in excess of your food requirements.

Midriff Dress for Juniors

Few fashions have taken as firm a hold on the younger-slimmer set as has the midriff dress. If this hug-me-tight fashion looked as well on larger girls as it does on the Size 11, (above) we'd advocate it for everybody. This style has the sheer woolen stripe worked both ways—horizontally and in bold verticals on the pleated skirt. The colors are in three shades of gray, a pearly tone, a taupe and a steel color with hints of red and yellow worked into the stripe

Husband Takes Greeley's Advice and 'Goes West;' Abandoned Wife Asks What Plans to Make

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: The last week in April, my husband left the city, saying he was going to take Greeley's advice and "Go West." His business was a failure and had taken a great toll of his health, his nerves particularly. I did nothing to stop him, for his mind was made up. He is now in California, and not making a living. He wrote once to ask me to join him. I answered that he would have to furnish me some proof of security before I gave up my job here and put that much distance between my family and friends.

You see, if the worst comes here, I can always swallow my pride and go home (to North Carolina) but California is a bit too far. After my husband left, I moved into a smaller apartment, saving $15 a month on rent and storing some furniture in a friend's house. My salary is just short of $20 a week (although I was making $40 a week, in another city, before my marriage) and it is quite a problem to live on it.

My apartment is small, with scant closet space and miserably hot in summer. I have tried to find a girl to share it with me, and several have come to investigate, but all had faults to find. Should I take a more comfortable apartment and trust that I will evenually secure a housemate? Or should I dispose of the furniture and move to a rooming house? I am 33, have been married six years and, frankly, never expect my husband to return to Washington.

I need companionship and lack the money to do things which would help. I have never liked the idea of a boarding house. I enjoy my own home with my own things around me, and my own kitchen. But now I give little attention to the preparation of food. When I come home the thought of preparing a meal and eating alone is actually distasteful. It doesn't seem worth the effort, so I don't eat.

What is the best thing for me to do? My rather childish dream of a home, husband, children and living happily ever after is over. I still care for my husband, in a way, but do not believe he will ever provide the security I long for. I must make a life of my own. I feel actually old in the company of persons a few years younger than myself. I want to conquer that feeling. But first the "living" problem must be solved. Once I know where and what my home is to be, I believe it will not be hard to take the other steps. Please advise me.

Respectfully yours,
UNSETTLED.

Finding a House Mate To Share Expenses

DEAR UNSETTLED: Rather than burden yourself with an apartment you cannot afford, simply on the chance that you might find a "housemate" to share expenses, why not locate the girl first and have her collaborate in finding and furnishing a suitable place? The local Y. W. C. A. might be able to help you in this regard, as I understand it has a perennial waiting list of well-recommended girls seeking equally well-recommended places to live when "Y" accommodations are not available. Or you might locate her through the medium of classified advertising. Or by inquiring of your friends or your business associates.

You might advertise somewhat to this effect:

"WANTED—Young businesswoman to share two (or three) room apartment with another businesswoman, who has ample furnishings (now stored) for two. Eager to make change from uncomfortably small quarters. Open to suggestions about location, conveniences, rental costs, etc., etc."

If you fail to find a congenial woman to share the comforts and expenses of a pleasant apartment, despite your best efforts, I think boarding-house life might offer distinct advantages over a bachelor apartment that is a heavy drain on your purse. The cash savings effected each month would spell the difference between constant recreation, on a modest scale, and no recreation whatsoever, and allow you something over and above to spend on your appearance. Moreover, you would eat regularly at a boarding house, as a matter of habit and economy, and if you choose the place with care, you should find yourself surrounded with companionable men and women of contemporary age.

The chief recommendation of the bachelor apartment is the opportunity it affords for entertaining to suit one's self. However, it can be—and usually is—only a millstone around the neck of the woman whose income is so slender that she can barely meet the rent, and for whom entertaining is out the question. Unless she is so utterly domesticated as to purr with contentment while polishing the pans and dusting the corners, she maintains her apartment at considerable expense to her personality.

If you cannot find a "housemate" by the 1st of October, say, I would advise you to spend the winter in a boarding house. By spring you may be so tired of that arrangement that you will leap at the chance to eat alone again. And you may, in the meantime, have run across the girl who would love to move in with you. So hang on to your furniture. You are being ridiculous in thinking your so-called "childish dream of a home, husband, children and living happily ever after is over." Just be a little more deliberate in your choice of a husband next time.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Chicken Livers With Rice Says Faik Konitza

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor

FAIK KONITZA, the "erstwhile envoy" of Albania, is a cultured member of the Washington Diplomatic Corps. Already possessing a "high hat" in recognition of his marvelous sense of humor, I think he merits recognition as an artist at the range. Whether he is making Oriental coffee, which must be carefully ground for brewing in that "certain" copper pot, cooking mushrooms, or assembling a shortcake, it is done in a distinctve way.

Mr. Konitza

Mr. Konitza gave me the recipe for his favorite dish—Wild Rice with Chicken Livers. Wild rice was so important to the Chippewas and Sioux in our country that they fought innumerable battles over the rice fields. Wild rice is important, too, when developing the regal dish which Mr. Konitza prefers, for it is a perfect affinity for game.

This recipe of Mr. Konitza's makes a triumphant dish especially suitable for a buffet supper. However, he says he enjoys it with a glass of sherry.

Wild Rice With Chicken Livers.

Wash 6 chicken livers thoroughly. Season with salt, pepper and paprika. Add parsley chopped fine and a lump of butter. Boil ½ cup wild rice for 10 minutes. Drain thoroughly. Mix the rice with the cooked livers and add 1 tablespoon sherry. Tie the mixture in dampened ratapar paper. Dip into boiling water and cook for 30 minutes.

Foreign Beauty Contest Winners Visit Manhattan

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—While Americans dash for what is left of Europe, or for the lands to the south, we seem to be importing vast numbers of beauty contest winners—as though we hadn't enough. First came Miss Mamie Joyce from County Carlow, Eire. Surrounded by an honor guard of relatives, she could only tell us that she'd make her headquarters at the Fair's Irish Pavilion.

On the very next boat arrived Miss Edith Hammond, of England, winner of 57 contests. "And not only for beauty," she told the admiring press. "I have a personality and a figure, too. A Venus figure." She copped a Venus prize in a field of 28,000 girls—which is a lot of Venuses, all right. "I'd like to see how I'd do in a contest against your American girls," said Miss Hammond, a little wistfully.

Red-headed Edythe Marrener, of Brooklyn, came home the other day, to see herself as the love interest in the new film version of "Beau Geste." Only now she is known as Susan Hayward. In Hollywood, maybe, but not in dear old Flatbush.

Actress Wears Blinkers to Shield Eyes at Night

Hollywood.—Whenever a composite picture is made of the ideal movie or radio star Gale Page furnishes the eyes. They are dark, large and lustrous.

Because acting under brilliant lights is not easy on the eyes screen stars must give them special care and make-up. Gale has suggestions on both counts.

She always has at least eight hours of sleep and wears black velvet "blinkers" if any sort of bright light shines into her room. Frequently during the day she closes her eyes to the count of 100, then opens them and focuses them on some distant object for another count. It's the best of optic exercises. Before going out at night she relaxes them first with warm compresses and then with cold astringent-soaked pads. On dusty days she washes her eyes with a weak, warm boric acid solution.

In making up eyes Gale's first thought is to the surrounding territory. Before applying powder base or powder below the eyes she pulls the skin taut to assure its going on smoothly. Her brows retain their natural line which follows the bony structure above the eye. She uses mascara on both lashes and brows, putting it on the brows with short, quick strokes. After removing mascara with cream at night, Gale brushes her brows and lashes with warm white vaseline.

Dancer Fell Three Floors

Marsha La Clair, 24-year-old club singer and dancer, plunged three floors from the window of a Baltimore hotel. Found at 3 a. m. yesterday, she remained unconscious for eight hours, but was reported today to be on the road to recovery. Physicians said she had suffered shock, cuts and bruises and was also suffering from acute alcoholism. The girl told police she was despondent over the divorce of her parents in Montclair, N. J.

Mrs. Bernton Urges Laws On Adoption

Says No Protection Is Available to Child Or Mother Before Formal Request

Long-standing need of legislation in the District to regulate placement of babies for adoption was emphasized yesterday by Mrs. Harry S. Bernton, president of the Council of Social Agencies, in commenting on a recommendation made Tuesday by Justice Alan Goldsborough that adoption agencies be supervised.

Justice Goldsborough made his statement in concluding a habeas corpus proceeding brought by Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Thorne, of East Riverdale, Md., to recover their four-month-old daughter Barbara Alicia Thorne, who had been placed with a wealthy Connecticut couple by Mrs. Annie L. Grover, of 3813 Jocelyn street northwest.

While the justice said there was no evidence that Mrs. Grover had done any wrong, he warned that lack of supervision of adoption agencies might lead to grave injustice and injury to children.

Law Passed in 1937

Mrs. Bernton, in expressing her approval of the justice's warning, reviewed efforts made by the council for several years past. She recalled that an adoption law was passed in August, 1937, which was indorsed by the council. This requires a thorough investigation by the Board of Public Welfare into the fitness of the adopting parents and into the heritage of the child.

"But no protection is available for the child or the mother prior to the formal request for adoption," she said.

Referring to a study of child welfare in the District by Dr. Jacob Kepecs, director of the Jewish Children's Bureau of Chicago, that was authorized by the Commissioners last spring, Mrs. Bernton declared, "Commercialized practices in the placement of children and the subsequent heartbreak, would be eliminated, or at least minimized, if the services recommended by Dr. Kepecs were carried out."

Legislation, she said, is desirable for licensing of boarding homes receiving children from agencies or from private individuals and has been sought by the council.

"Given to Anyone"

"Children," she charged, "are often given to anyone who will take them, without any investigation of the fitness of the foster parents, and often without the full consent of the mother. Only in those instances where formal adoption proceedings have been instituted can the Board of Public Welfare investigate the homes."

There is no law, it was pointed out yesterday, that requires reports of placements of babies, so that unless a request for adoption is filed in the District Court, there is no legal protection for the infants. Rigid requirements, and complete secrecy, are involved in court adoption proceedings.

Scores of children are believed to pass through the hands of "baby brokers" in Washington each year, without any such check as is provided by law in cases of adoption.

Miss Morss' Suggestion

A regulatory law, if passed, should contain, according to Miss Patricia Morss, of the Board of Public Welfare's Children's Bureau, provisions for preserving the identity of an adopted child. At present this is lost when foster parents take it from an unsupervised agent. She also advocates licensing and supervision of persons placing babies for adoption, and restriction of the freedom of parents to dispose of their children.

Capt. Rhoda J. Milliken, of the Police Women's Bureau yesterday emphasized value of the last provision. Some parents, she said, have changed their minds or have found their economic position improved, and have sought the return of their babies, only to find that they had been sent to the Far West, Europe, or South America.

Only five States now lack supervision of adoption agents, it was pointed out yesterday by the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor.

Hyattsville Fines 2 Washington Men In Gaming Drive

Two Washington men were convicted in Hyattsville (Md.) police court yesterday of setting up and maintaining gaming tables as State's Attorney H. Winship Wheatley, jr., continued his gambling cleanup campaign in Prince Georges County.

Arrested July 18 when police seized three slot machines at the Home Stretch Inn at Oakland, Md., the men were Edward Roach, 900 block of Eighth street northwest, and Raymond R. Barkley, 1400 block of Harvard street northwest. Roach was fined $200, and Barkley $150 by Judge Walter Green. Both defendants appealed to the Circuit Court.

Describing slot machines as "one-armed bandits," Wheatley told the court he was anxious to get rid of all of them.

Gaming Charged To 2 After Raid At Rooming House

A woman and a houseman were charged with operating a gambling establishment, and two women patrons were released yesterday after a raid on a rooming house in the 200 block D street northwest.

Mrs. Alma McDaniels, 40, proprietor of the house, was charged with setting up a gaming table, operating a lottery and the possession of lottery slips. Robert Dozier, colored, 40, also of the 200 block D street northwest, was accused also of setting up a gaming table.

"When I play music, it's liquid," said Rudolph Ganz, guest conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra, last night

hesitated, and some resolved to stay; but during the 10-minute shower the crowded special buses going to the Watergate were matched by equally crowded buses coming away. Of the few canoes that had already appeared on the choppy river, some made pup-tents out of blankets and more sought shelter under the footbridge leading to the barge.

A short break in the rain encouraged some of the steadily arriving throng to stay, then ten minutes before concert time a new and greater downpour began.

The waiting audience, refusing to be put off, scurried to the underpasses for shelter, while little knots of people, wet already, huddled together under umbrellas at their places.

By 8 o'clock the rain had somewhat lightened, and ten minutes later the protecting curtain was hauled up from the barge, to the audience's applause.

Then with a rush and a brilliant gold-and-silver harmony the opening bars of Weber's overture to "Euryanthe" came to the wet but happy listeners. By the time the music reached its all-conquering climax, 3,000 enthusiastic listeners were glued to their seats in the midst of a third shower.

Musicians Applaud Taylor

Millard Taylor, concert master of the National Symphony Orchestra, then stepped out amid the resounding applause of his fellow musicians to play the Bruch Concerto No. 2 in D Minor, for violin and orchestra. His rich, warm tone put color and power into the singing melodies, contrasting first with the mournful background of the accompanying orchestra, then blending with it in a dark melancholy that gave way in the third movement to a perhaps defiant cheerfulness.

His performance, accompanied part-way by the toneless obligato of the raindrops on umbrellas and raincoats in the audience, lost nothing of its vividness through Taylor's difficulties with the rain. Stray drops appeared to splash onto the neck of his violin, and he had to seize every opportunity to correct the tuning of the damp strings.

Three excerpts from Wagner's opera "The Mastersingers," the introduction to Act III, Dance of the Apprentices, and March, opened the second half of the program. Siegfried's Rhine Journey, from "The Mastersingers," had to be omitted from the first half because of the delay caused by the rain.

The storm then finally over, stars shone over the orchestra from above a ring of clouds on the horizon, making a perfect setting for the peaceful introduction to the Wagner excerpts. After the frivolous and jolly dance, the orchestra passed to the more typically Wagnerian, grandiose pageantry of the march.

Listeners Delighted

Whithorne's "Fandango" followed, a sometimes strident, often discordant fantasy which had little in common with the Spanish dance from which it takes its name beyond the basic rhythm. The listeners gave a more delighted reception to the next three selections, Bizet's "L'Arlesienne Suite" No. 1, the popular "Danse Macabre," by Saint-Saens, and Chaikoski's "Capriccio Italien."

Many in the audience, and in one moment of unchecked enthusiasm the conductor himself, yielded to the temptation to hum the highly singable melodies that fill this last work, the first seeming to bear the tragedy of 1,000 years; the second, a light chuckle that becomes a march of triumph; the third, an Italian dance, scene of wine and olive-skinned women and long skirts swishing, and the last, fast and merry, an Alpine spring-time.

The scattered audience applauded with a will that made up for its small numbers, till Ganz played as encores the sprightly "March of the Boyars," by Halvorsen, and Rimski-Korsakov's burlesque, the "Dance of the Clowns," from "The Snow Maiden."

Last night's appearance was Ganz's fourth in Washington and his third at the Watergate. He played in the rain last year and in the first season of the summer concerts in 1935. He also directed the National Symphony Orchestra here last March.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Anticipation of enjoyment by faithful music lovers was rewarded last night by Rudolph Ganz, guest conductor for the National Symphony Orchestra, who had chosen for the first two numbers an operatic overture of indubitable genius and one of the great violin concertos.

That Weber's "Euryanthe" failed on the stage was not the fault of the music but of an almost insufferably dull libretto. The overture, perennially fresh and firmly fixed in the concert repertoire, reminds us now and then that the composer was far in advance of his period. Weber laid the foundations for the music-drama that Wagner reared to such impressive heights, and had he not died at 39 the history of opera would have contained another chapter on the struggle for supremacy between two masters.

For Weber is the link between Gluck and Wagner, and "Euryanthe" is the first example of a theatrical score written from beginning to end on an intellectual basis. It also marks the inauguration of the "unbroken flow of melody," the device with which Wagner wrought such magical feats. That the public did not understand the importance of his innovations in this work was a severe blow to Weber, who for more than a year did not compose a note, and lamented to his friends: "I have no desire for music-paper and pianoforte, and could very easily persuade myself that I had once been a tailor."

The violin masterpiece which Mr. Ganz brought forward with Concertmaster Millard Taylor as soloist was Max Bruch's D minor concerto, Op. 44. Not as familiar to the average listener as the one in G minor, it is in every respect as noble and moving a work. With a remarkable gift for melodic writing, Bruch endowed all his music with beauty, and when he emerges from the shadow of Brahms, as he will in the course of time, many of his compositions now neglected will be fully appreciated.

Mr. Taylor read the concerto eloquently with a persuasively singing tone and an easy command of technique. Though handicapped by the effect of humidity on his strings, he maintained an admirable intonation and a perfect clarity of phrasing.

The program included two Wagnerian excerpts from "Die Meistersinger" and "Die Goetterdaemmerung," and in them the orchestra yielded to Mr. Ganz all that he asked for in the way of sonority and color. Particularly effective was the sombre introduction to the third act of "Die Meistersinger," that marvelous bit of musical psychology which expresses the meditations of Hans Sachs.

Emerson Whithorne's "Fandango," a novelty to the orchestra, seemed to have been insufficiently rehearsed, but even had the musicians been letter perfect in the score, the music would not have been noteworthy. Its principal interest in rhythmical, and the few melodic ideas have been smothered in the instrumentation.

The weakness of the Whithorne score was thrown into relief by the vitality and grace of Bizet as exemplified in the first suite from the "L'Arlesienne." This was followed by Saint-Saens' "Danse Macabre" and Chaikovski's "Capriccio Italien."

Mr. Ganz, who has always been a welcome visitor at the "Sunset Symphonies" since they were started, was recalled warmly at the close of the concert. His response to the demonstration was two extra numbers—Johan Halvorsen's "Entry of the Boyards" and the "Dance of the Clowns," from Rimski-Korsakov's "Snow Maiden."

Lee Highway Widening Sped

In an effort to take care of continued traffic increases over the Lee highway from a point where it meets the Lee boulevard about two miles north of the Fairfax courthouse, Thomas W. Ross, State highway right of way engineer, announced yesterday that rights of way for widening to extend to Centerville, a distance of eight miles, are now being obtained.

While no date can be given as to when construction would begin, he said the tentative plans provide for center parking with two lanes for traffic on each side.

Finance Plan For Parkway Is Agreed On

Arlington Officials And D.C. Commission Members to Make A Report on Monday

Final details for raising of funds and acquisition of land for Unit No. 2 of the George Washington Memorial Parkway were agreed upon yesterday at a conference of Arlington County officials and staff members of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

The former will make their report at a meeting of the county board on Monday. The executive committee of the planning body has the authority to act on the reported agreement without having to wait for the commission's next meeting in September.

Bids Close August 22

Meanwhile, the Bureau of Public Roads announced it would receive bids until August 22 for the contract on remodeling of Rosslyn Plaza, which is part of the parkway project. Work is expected to begin by September 1 and be completed before New Year's.

Addition of a span to Key Bridge on the Virginia side, alteration of the plaza and development of Unit No. 2 all are part of the vast George Washington Memorial Parkway project, which Congress authorized in 1930. The new span, under which the parkway will pass, is scheduled to be finished in November or December.

Thomas S. Settle, secretary of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, announced following yesterday's conference here with the Arlington officials that $180,000 probably will be adequate for land purchase in Unit No. 2. The earlier estimate was $100,000.

$135,000 Needed

The State of Virginia has already appropriated $50,000 as its share, and the Federal Government $100,000. Only $45,000 and $90,000, respectively, will be needed for this particular unit, and the difference will be applied to development of other sections of the parkway, Settle indicated.

Arlington County is expected to raise its share of $45,000, part of which is already available. Unit No. 2 extends from Key Bridge to Spout Run, abuot a half-mile upstream.

Zoo Seeking MuteLions, They're Stone Deaf, Too

A movement is under way, it was learned yesterday, to bring to National Zoological Park a variety of lion which neither roars, sleeps nor wags its tail.

Several of the lions—or their heads, at least—adorn the fountain which stands at the north front of the Treasury building and which is to be removed to make way for the new Gallatin statue.

While Government officials are making up their minds what to do with the fountain, Melvin D. Hildreth, Washington attorney and president of the Circus Fans Association, yesterday announced his intention of working for its transfer to the zoo.

"It would look fine in the middle of the bird pond to be built near the lion house," he said.

W. E. Reynolds, commissioner of the Public Buildings Administration, said he could see no objection to the gift, since the zoo is a Federal institution.

Dr. William M. Mann, director of National Zoological Park, withheld comment pending discussions with officials of the Smithsonian Institution, the zoo's parent agency.

Icelander, Here To See Housing, Says It's Hot There

Since the experts say heat misery is 90 per cent mental anyway, here's a little story about Iceland, and a young man from there, to provide psychological relief.

A representative of the town planning board of Iceland, Bjarnason is in this country to study municipal planning, landscape design and housing.

He is so pleased he is tolerant with folks who ask him if he brought his snowshoes along.

"This summer has been especially hot at home. On many days the temperature has gone into the 80's," he said.

Lorton, Relief Jobs Held to Be 'Wide Open'

So McReynolds Says; Mrs. Biddle After Welfare Position

Frederick W. McReynolds, chairman of the Board of Public Welfare, announced yesterday the jobs of assistant relief director and superintendent of Lorton are "still wide open."

Although several persons have been mentioned for the posts, the penal and public assistance committee of the board has not made any recommendation for the posts, it was said.

Meantime, Mrs. Lloyd W. Biddle, local clubwoman, called on officials yesterday to give a woman a job "big enough to make a noise." She also said she was a candidate for the job of assistant relief director, to succeed May O. Hankins, who resigned in April.

An official of the District Federation of Women's Clubs and one of its past presidents, Mrs. Biddle, said she had conferred last week with Commissioner Allen about the job.

The welfare board chairman also stated the new welfare director, Robert Earl Bondy, would attend all future meetings when a candidate for a job is considered.

He said it was unlikely any action would be taken to fill the two vacancies before the regular meeting on August 28.

The successor to Col. William Peak as warden of Lorton may be among five candidates which have been considered by the penal committee. Two of the candidates are known to be Jerry Welch, deputy superintendent, and E. Allen Green, executive assistant and business manager, who acts as assistant general superintendent of the penal institutions.

Plant Extension Sought by Pepco

The Public Utilities Commission yesterday studied a proposal of the Potomac Electric Power Co. to enlarge its power plant at Buzzards Point.

At the same time, the commission requested company officials to answer questions regarding the proposal, including the estimated cost, whether the work would be done by contract or competitive bidding and data on the annual output and peak load for each year since 1932 and the estimated figures for the next five years.

Police Urge Central High Radio Station

Board of Education Queried on Proposed Site for 2-Way System

Use of Central High School grounds for a receiving set for the proposed two-way radio service soon to be inaugurated by the Police and Fire departments has been requested of the Board of Education, it was learned yesterday.

After the Washington Monument Society refused to permit the use of the landmark for the receiving set, District officials experimented to find other suitable locations. The school site was selected, in addition to four fire engine stations in various parts of the city.

Herbert A. Friede, superintendent of the police and firm alarm systems, expects to get part of a $500,000 loan and grant asked from PWA for the new fire alarm headquarters, for the new radio service.

In addition, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of the Metropolitan police, said he had enough funds available to install the two-way radios in about eight scout cars. A similar number will be tried out in Fire Department vehicles.

The four fire stations which would serve the radio system are Engine Companies 16, 22, 25 and 31, Friede said.

The estimated cost to equip a scout car with the two-way system is $350. In time, providing Congress appropriates the money, all police cars would be equipped with the new sets.

Boy Hit-Run Victim

William Griffin, 14, of 116 Eleventh street northeast, was struck by a hit-run automobile yesterday while playing in front of his home. He was treated at Casualty Hospital for a broken collar bone.

Police reported the boy was knocked down by a tan sedan, whose driver stopped, helped William to the sidewalk and then sped away. A lookout was flashed for the car.

Brady Rites Will Open Legion Rally

D. C. Veterans to Vote On Forming a 'Home Guard' in Event of War, at Session Here

A memorial service for the late James T. Brady, commander of the District department of the American Legion, will open the District Legion's twenty-first annual convention in the Hotel Mayflower at 7:30 p. m. today.

For the first time in the history of the District division the convention will not get under way with a military parade.

The proposal that all American Legionnaires form a "home guard" in the event of war will be voted on at this week's session.

Should the resolution be adopted by the local department, it will be recommended to the national convention of the legion meeting in Chicago Spetember 25-28, District legion officials said.

Candidates for the position of department commander include Daniel M. Goodacre, department adjutant; Gail T. Judd, Department of Labor Post; Joseph Idler, Department of Justice Post; William T. Slattery, United States Treasury Post; Owen C. Holleran, of the Stephen P. McGroarty Post, has withdrawn from the race.

Buddy Lewis Injured as Yanks Rout Nats, 13-8

40,000 See Favored Peter Astra Win Rich Hambletonian at Goshen

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Lewis Hurt as Yanks Rout Griffmen, 13-8

By Shirley Povich.

Washington's' eight-game winning streak was a hit-wave victim yesterday. The Nats collapsed in full view of 14,000 Griffith Stadium customers. They were prostrated by 15 Yankee hits of all dimensions, including a pair of powerful home runs, and their dreams of a ninth-straight victory evolved into a 13-to-8 nightmare.

The Nats were blasted out of the ball game in the first two innings when the Yankees, chafing at three straight defeats, took horrible vengeance on Ken Chase and knocked him loose from 7 runs. By the end of the third inning they had a 11-to-3 lead, wringing 4 more runs out of Venezuelan Alex Alexandra.

Thirteen of their 15 hits the Yankees packed into those first three innings to make a shambles of the ball game. In the comfort of a 9-run lead, big Red Ruffing merely coasted to his sixteenth victory of the year. He was removed from the game after the Nats scored 4 useless runs in the seventh inning in a rally that fell 6 runs short of tying the score.

The Nats suffered the loss not only of the ball game, but of Buddy Lewis. The young third baseman was felled by a throw to first base by Ruffing in the fifth inning. Struck on the back of the head by the ball as he was running out a grounder to the box, Lewis was hit as he crossed the bag and pitched

Leonard Hurls Against Yanks At Stadium

Dutch Leonard and his knuckle ball will attempt to give the Nats the edge in the three-game series with the Yankees today . . . Manager Joe McCarthy, who worked Red Ruffing out of turn yesterday in a desperate attempt to stem the Yankee defeats, will call on right-handed Monte Pearson today . . . Joe DiMaggio's first-inning single was his 100th hit of the year, but it was nothing to brag about . . . until it took a freak hop over Cecil Travis' head it was a meek double-play grounder. . . . there was nothing meek about DiMaggio's second-inning clout, though . . . . it was the longest swat into the leftfield bleachers of the 1939 season, landing three-quarters the distance to the top signs . . . Joe Gordon and Jimmy Bloodworth battled to a scintillating draw in their fancy second-base play yesterday . . . in making his lunging catch of Buddy Lewis' liner in the first inning, Gordon lost both his cap and his glove but miraculously held onto the ball . . . as far as Griffith Stadium fans are concerned, Jimmy Bloodworth is presidential timber, what with his sensational pick-ups . . . Rick Ferrell after being brushed by a box-seat fan and nearly losing Rolfe's high foul in the sixth inning, magnanimously tossed the ball to the fan after making the catch and drew one of the loudest cheers of the afternoon . . . Buddy Lewis was carried off the field on a stretcher because it is an inviolable rule of Clark Griffith's that any player suffering a head injury must not be permitted to walk off the field . . . Lewis suffered only a slight concussion and may be discharged from the hospital tomorrow . . . Babe Dahlgren was an outstanding performer for the Yanks yesterday . . . he stood out in bold relief as the only Yankee regular who didn't make a hit . . . Leonard, the only pitcher who has beaten the Yankees more than twice this season, will be trying for his fourth straight over the New Yorkers today.

Riggs and Parker Gains Quarterfinals; Marble, Fabyan Score

By the Associated Press

Rye, N. Y., Aug. 9.—Don McNeill, of Oklahoma City, seeded No. 3 in the Eastern grass court championships, was eliminated today by unranked Henry Prusoff, of Seattle, 7—5, 3—6, 7—5, but his defeat did not affect his Davis Cup status, for Walter Pate, nonplaying captain, named McNeill and six others to the squad later in the day.

The others, all of whom are entered in either singles or doubles, are Bobby Riggs, of Chicago; Gene Mako, of Los Angeles; Elwood T. Cooke, of Portland, Oreg.; Frank Parker, of Beverly Hills, Calif.; Bryan (Bitsy) Grant, of Atlanta, and Sidney Wood, of New York. All but McNeill and Cooke have been on the squad before.

Riggs, Parker Advance

Riggs and Parker, seeded first and second, advanced to the quarter-final round along with Prusoff—Riggs with a 7—5, 6—2, triumph over Gardnar Mulloy, of Miami, and Parker, with a 6—4, 6—2, victory over Bob Peacock, of Berkeley, Calif.

Grant, seeded No. 5, scored easily over Marvin Wachman, of Chicago, 6—2, 6—2, but Wood lost to Welby Van Horn, of Los Angeles, 2—6, 8—6, 6—4.

Tomorrow's pairings: Riggs vs. Grant; Prusoff vs. Ladislav Hecht, of Czecho-Slovakia; Parker vs. John Hope Doeg, of Rumson, N. J.; Van Horn vs. Gil Hunt, of Washington, D. C.

Two members of the British Wightman Cup team were ousted from the women's division when Valerie Scott bowed to Alice Marble, defending champion, 6—2, 6—1, and Mary Hardwick defaulted to Mary Arnold, of Los Angeles, because of the heat.

Set Pace in Doubles

Tomorrow's pairings pit Miss Marble against Miss Arnold; Dorothy Workman, of Los Angeles, vs. Mme. Rene Mathieu, of France; Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, of Brookline, Mass., vs. Mrs. Freda James Hammersley, of Great Britain, and Dorothy May Bundy, of Santa Monica, Calif., vs. Kay Stammers, of Great Britain.

Miss Marble and Mrs. Fabyan, top-seeded in the doubles, led the advance into the quarter-final round with a 6—1, 6—0 victory over Marilyn McRae, of Little Rock, Ark., and Elizabeth Blackman, of Detroit. The other quarter-finalists are Helen Jacobs and Miss Workman; Mme. Mathieu and Mrs. Virginia Rice Johnson, of Boston; Miss Arnold and Miss Bundy, Miss Stammers and Mrs. Hammersley; Dorothy Andrus, of Stamford, Conn., and Mme. Sylvia Henrotin, of France, and Betty Nuthall and Miss Brown, of England.

Aussie Davis Cup Team To Play Cubans Today

Sea Bright, N. J., Aug. 9 (AP).—Australia's Davis Cup team, favored by many to win the trophy from the United States this year, faces Cuba tomorrow in the finals of the North American zone at the Sea Bright Club.

The winner will face Yugoslavia in the interzone finals to determine which country shall meet the United States in the challenge round next month at Merion, Pa.

Dr. Parshall Pilots Peter Astra to Victory

By the Associated Press

Goshen, N. Y., Aug. 9.—The dreams of a 70-year-old country doctor came true today.

Two years ago modest, retiring Dr. Lowry Miller Guilinger, of Andover, Ohio, stepped into a New York sales ring and paid $3,250 for the colt Peter Astra. This afternoon he sat in the midst of a sweltering crowd of some 40,000 fans at Good Time Park and saw his horse win the Hambletonian, the richest and most famous of trotting horse stakes.

This colt, for which Dr. Guilinger has been offered $37,500, not only fulfilled the hopes of his owner and those of the crowd who made him the prohibitive 2-to-5 favorite, but he did it the easy way, in straight heats he won $21,342.35, the victor's share of the purse of $40,502.46, to maintain a record of having not lost a heat in chalking up five stake triumphs this year.

Dr. H. M. Parshall, Urbana, Ohio, 41-year-old veterinarian, brought Peter down to the finish line three lengths in front of Gauntlet, from C. W. Phellis' Greenwich, Conn., stable in the first heat, and in the second increased his margin to five lengths over the same horse.

Misses Record

The Times, 2:05¼ for the first mile and 2:04¼ for the second, were far off the Hambletonian record of 2:01¼, but fast enough to beat the nine other three-year-olds that dared to test Peter's speed and stamina. They also were good enough to give Parshall, America's leading driver for 12 of the last 13 years, his second triumph in the buggy whip derby.

His previous victory was with Lord Jim in 1934.

Our Mr. Povich Is a Mere Fetich For Bloodworth

Bloodworth

Last week, Jimmy (I'll-be-in-the-All-Star game) Bloodworth shook Povich thoroughly in the clubhouse and made three hits. Every afternoon since then Povich has been greeted by a flying tackle as he went under the stands.

Yesterday, according to reliable reporters, Bloodworth picked Povich up by the heels and jittered dimes all over the floor. "I'm going to get a triple out of you today," said Jimmy.

Bloodworth smacked a three-base hit in the first inning.

Jack Quintrell Wins Maryland Park Event

Edith Estabrooks Beats Two-Time Champion In Women's Closed Play

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Aug. 9.—It was "Black Wednesday" at Oakland Hills Country Club today and no fewer than three major upsets were recorded as the second round of the thirty-ninth annual Women's Western Closed Golf Championship was completed.

Chief of the day's casualties over the exacting, wind-swept layout was Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., tournament medalist and two-time champion.

Edith Estabrooks, young Dubuque, Iowa, star, accounted for Miss Miley's downfall, winning 2 and 1 after being three down at the end of the first three holes, all of which were birdied by the Kentuckian.

Also on the sidelines tonight was Dorothy Traung, of San Francisco, the 1938 champion, who bowed out to Harriet Randall, 21-year-old Indianapolis player, one up.

The third upset was registered by Mrs. Tim Lowry, of Chicago, who beat the favored Beatrice Barrett, of Minneapolis, one up.

In the quarter-finals tomorrow in the upper bracket, Miss Estabrooks will play Miss Raneall while Mrs. Lowry will face Mrs. Russell Mann, of Miwaukee.

U. S. Yacht Loses To British Boat

Lewis, Felled by Throw to First, Is Carried From Field

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The past-performance book is in a position to utter a triumphant "I told you so," if on the evening of August 22 at Yankee Stadium, curly-haired Lou Ambers relieves dark-skinned Henry Armstrong of his world welter and lightweight titles.

POVICH

Armstrong beat Ambers in their last affair and will very properly go into the ring as the favorite to do it all over again, but nevertheless it's not in the book for Armstrong to win again. Because Ambers apparently has the unfailing knack of reversing decisions against everybody who has licked him when they met in a return bout.

Let's look at the record, as Al Smith might have said of the coming Armstrong-Ambers bout:

In 1935, after Barney Ross retired from the 135-pound lightweight class to concentrate his efforts in the defense of his welterweight title, Lou Ambers was an ambitious young lightweight in the elimination tournament to crown Ross' successor. He met up with Tony Canzoneri in that tournament and was eliminated.

A year later he met up with Canzoneri again, and this time it was Ambers' glove which was raised at the finish. But the bout was not fought for the title. Ambers was forced to battle Canzoneri again with the title at stake and that he did in 1937, winning the crown.

As reigning champion of the lightweights, Ambers lost some luster when in an overweight match with Pedro Montenez in April, 1937, he was licked by the Central American. But for Ambers that was merely another defeat to be wiped out.

Failed to "Sell His Title"

They met again—Ambers and Montenez—five months later on Mike Jacobs' famed Carnival of Champions on the night when five titles were at stake. Ambers was getting the largest guarantee—$82,000—of any of the champions on that card because it was agreed by fight critics that he was merely selling his title in taking on Montenez who had so clearly outfought him before. But the winner that night was not Montenez, but Ambers. Again he had wiped out the stigma of a defeat.

Back in 1936, before he had won the title, Ambers dropped a decision to Steve Halaiko on his way up to the championship bout. One of the first bouts he scheduled as champion was with this same Halaiko. He gave his former conqueror an unmerciful beating and knocked him out in three rounds at Syracuse.

It's no secret that Ambers gave Armstrong the latter's toughest fight since the chocolate chopper zoomed into the big leagues of the prize ring industry. He was the first opponent of Armstrong to stand up and punch with the Negro over a distance and keep punching to the finish. At the finish Armstrong was in more distress than Ambers, in fact.

Stayed Well With Armstrong

That night the supposedly incomparable stamina of Armstrong was more than matched by Ambers, who like the champion, is a perpetual motion fighter. Only the huge lead compiled by Armstrong in the early rounds enabled him to win the fight, and following the battle Ambers was accused of having fought a badly paced bout. He had demonstrated too late that he could punch with Armstrong.

The chances are that Armstrong will enter the ring on August 22 at the longest odds-on price ever quoted against him since he became a sensational fistic figure. By this time it is pretty well established that his hands are something of an Achilles heel. He hurt them against the thick head of Petey Sarron and he bruised them badly again in his fight with Ambers. They buckled also in his fierce-punching battle with Roderick in England earlier in the year. His incessant punching amounts to abuse of his hands.

And the fact is that Ambers is a much more legitimate lightweight than Armstrong. The little Negro has showed an alarming weight-gaining tendency and there is some doubt that he can train down to 135 pounds without going stale or at a sacrifice of the punching power that wins his fights for him. Ambers will be fighting at his normal weight.

"One of Worst Clubs Ever"

The most ill-timed appraisal of the Washington Ball Club was made recently by a Chicago baseball writer who shall remain charitably unnamed. But there is no harm in quoting from his dispatch to the Chicago American on August 4, the eve of the White Sox's invasion of Washington for a three-game series.

"Winners in four of their last five starts, the merry White Sox moved into the Nation's Capital today to open a three-game series with the odd assortment of nodescript athletes which Clark Griffith is presenting as an American League pennant contender." (Editor's note—The merry White Sox were riding high in third place and at the time had licked the Nats 11 times in 14 games this season.)

"This Washington team isn't in last place, yet it is undobutedly one of the worst clubs ever to compete for the American League championship . . . it is actually a major misdemeanor for Griffith, who is supposed to be a pillar of strength to the American League, to put such a team on the field."

40,887 Watch Reds Win Two From Cubs

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 9.—Chicago's largest midweek crowd of the season—40,887 persons—watched the National League's pace-setting Cincinnati Reds resume pennant form today in dealing the Cubs a double setback, 7 to 5 and 11 to 3.

The victories, which included a nine-run inning in the second game, increased the Reds' first place margin to eight games, despite another triumph today by the runner-up St. Louis Cards.

After coming from behind in the first game with a 4-run seventh inning, the Reds clinched the nightcap in the fifth by scoring nine runs before a man was retired. The big inning drove Pitchers Claude Passeau, Earl Whitehill and Gene Lillare to the showers and brought Dizzy Dean, who yielded one run and five hits in the remaining four and one-third innings.

Wally Berger homered for the Reds in each game, his second coming in the big inning and scoring two ahead of him. Hank Leiber of the Cubs hit for the circuit in the opener, in which Frank McCormick led an 11-hit attack that kayoed Charley Root. He doubled in the first run and singled home two more with the bases filled in the seventh.

Singles by Lee Gamble and Bill Myers started the big fifth inning of the second game. A pass to Whitey Moore filled the bases, whereupon Bill Werber and Linus Frey each doubled home two runs. Whitehill replaced Passeau long enough to issue a pass and two singles and then Lillard came in to be greeted by Berger's homer that accounted for the last three runs. Lillard then permitted a single and

Cops Hold Rally For Labor Day Track, Field Meet

In preparation for the field day to be staged at Griffith Stadium on Labor Day, at which graying and youthful members of the Metropolitan police will cavort around the track for the benefit of the Police Retiring Association, a rally and dinner were held last night at Harrington Hotel. Inspector E. J. Kelly acted as toastmaster at the informal banquet attended by such police luminaries as Maj. Ernest W. Brown, Inspector W. G. Stott and Capt. Ira Keck.

The latter, Keck, will be in charge of publicity for the event on September 4. It will be his job to see that the track meet is able to contribute a helpful sum to the fund for the support of retired cops. The Retiring Association, organized in 1929, pays out more than $80,000 every two years to members of the force.

The press, in whose honor the dinner was given, was well represented. Several radio commentators were also present. Other guests included Goldie (Tru-Blu) Ahearn, Jimmy Lake, Rolland Lund, Artie Boyd, H. B. Rodier and Mr. and Mrs. Joe Arnold.

Giants Take Doubleheader From Boston

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 9.—The Giants snatched a double-decker victory from Boston's hapless Bees today, overcoming a four-run lead to take the first, 5 to 4, and bagging the nightcap, 6 to 5, in the eleventh inning when Fred Frankhouse, entering the game with the bases loaded, pitched wild to the first batter.

Double Inquiry Started as Injured Midget Auto Racer Dies

Beckett, Hurt At Speedway, Succumbs

Building Inspector's Office and A. A. A. Launch Investigation; Need New Inside Rail

By Al Hailey.

The bale of hay markers which caused the fatal crash of Larry Beckett, 37-year-old Dayton (Ohio) driver, in the midget auto races Tuesday night at the new Capitol Speedway must be eliminated, Ted Allen, secretary of the American Automobile Association contest board, said yesterday as it developed that safety precautions at the track will be investigated from two fronts.

Beckett, who suffered a severe concussion and possible fractured skull when thrown from his somersaulting racer, died yesterday at 2:28 p. m. in Sibley Hospital. His wife was at his bedside.

As the A. A. A., which governs recognized midget auto racing, prepared for its regular inquiry to determine if there were any contributary causes to the accident from the track condition, Lieut. Col. David L. McCoach, jr., District engineer commissioner, said he plans a check-up on the safety precautions for spectators.

Need Inside Guard Rail

"The hay markers used at the local track definitely should be eliminated," Allen said, refusing to term them a hazard but adding they are "not the best."

"Plans for the speedway call for an inner curve rail, which would be only about 3 inches high with spoke-like projections off the inner side of this pointing into the track infield," Allen said.

This type of marker for the inside of the track would immediately notify the driver when he was over the inside edge as his wheels bounced on the projections. Repetition of Tuesday night's accident, which apparently occurred when Beckett misjudged his distance from the hay markers at the inside rim of the track, would thus be virtually an impossibility.

Detailed Investigation

Meanwhile, McCoach said he is detailing an investigator from the building inspector's office to conduct a "thorough search" of conditions of stands and precautions on the outer rim of the track in order to determine if there is danger of the speeding racers plowing out into the crowd.

Allen, however, said that the track was forced to comply with spectator safety precautions before A. A. A. sanction was granted.

Nevertheless, the 15 drivers competing in Tuesday night's races complained heatedly about the poor lighting conditions on the speedway's south turn, some stating they could barely make it out when blinded by a spray of dirt or exhaust from other cars.

Unfortunate Accident

"We are investigating Beckett's accident, and if we find any contributory causes, of course we will demand that they be corrected," Allen said. "No one can be condemned for what happened Tuesday night, however. It was one of those unfortunate and very regrettable accidents."

Although a veteran driver, Beckett had restricted his driving to "big car" races in his 15 years of competition and was driving a midget for only the third time Tuesday night. The accident occurred as he led a field of six into the sixth lap of the night's first semifinal race.

His wife, Mrs. Dorothy H. Beckett, arrived in Washington at 1:20 yesterday and went directly to the hospital. She will accompany the body to Dayton, the home of their parents, at 6:50 p. m. today. Beckett is survived by his wife and two children, aged 16 and 14.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Aug. 9.—(Editor's note: More often than any of us cares to admit, there is little excuse for a news story from a fight camp. The fighter goes through deadly monotony of chores, gulps dinner and falls in bed, and the reporters—who have seen him do the same things a hundred times before—set about the task of unearthing some real or imagined difference in the pug's humdrum ritual, or they dig up what is called an angle. The angles don't pan out very often. Here, in sequence, is what actually took place at Henry Armstrong's camp at Pompton Lakes, N. J., the other afternoon. We wonder how you would have written the story, or what angle you would have taken.)

CONSIDINE

Eddie Mead (Armstrong's manager)—Damfino. He's about written out, I guess.

Doc Morris (publicity man)—Here's some dope you might use. I asked him who his favorite ball player was, and he said Joe DiMaggio; who his favorite author was, and he said Ernest Hemingway; who his favorite actress was, and he said Bette Davis; that's interesting, isn't it? Who his favorite singer was, and he said Marian Anderson. Lemme see now, he likes scotty puppies, wears a 15½ neck on his shirt, and he says that Ceferino Garcia hit him the hardest punch he ever felt. That oughta make a column.

Harry Armstrong (Henry's trainer)—I know this much: If he don't start losing weight in a hurry, I don't know what we're going to do. He weighed 143 today, no soft fat that sweats off, either.

Mead—I'll give you a story. It's possible that this'll be Henry's last fight as a lightweight. He might have to give up the title if he beats Ambers. In fact if Garcia beats Apostoli for the middleweight title, we'll challenge for that.

Mead—Okay, but how about Europe? There's six fellows over there who'd draw real good with Henry. The English have got that fellow Boon and a bunch of others around that weight, and the French have got a guy named Cirdan. I was in George Carpentier's place every night when we were in Paris, France, and George said I could get a fifty-grand guarantee to fight Cirdan.

Bill Farnsworth (the promoter, not the horse)—I wouldn't be surprised if it did two, or even two and a quarter ($225,000).

Mead—I hope you're right. The first one did a little over a hundred ($100,000), even though it was postponed a week and they had to stick it in the garden. And Henry was something like 3 to 1. He won't be 7 to 5 this time.

Morris—Maybe this would make a story. Henry's got a friend named Prof. Frederick Beale. He's one of them birds who reads the stars. Wait a minute—I'll bring him over. Get a load of him.

Beale (A young colored man dressed in a graduation gown and mortar board, for a publicity picture)—Henry was born under the sign of Sagittarius, and my chart readings say that on the twenty-second of this month, the night of the fight, Henry will express himself most strongly and favorably.

Beale (hurt)—Not necessarily. All the great disasters since the London fire of 1620 have been predicted by astrologers.

Beale—When was he born?

Morris (thumbing record book)—November 8, 1913.

Beale (dreamily)—Scorpion. He must be a man of great will power, sincere at his work. He believes in himself and pain means nothing to him. He is a man of Mars. Wow! That's gonna be some fight.

Mead—Let's go inside. Henry's ready.

(Henry went three every-day rounds with Frankie Wallace, a Cleveland Italian with a heavy wound over one eye. The silent little audience which watched the encounter was made up of a handful of reporters, a photographer, two broken-nosed seconds, two chorus girls from the Cotton Club, a reporter's wife, his 3-year-old son and one cash customer named Julius Feidler, a band leader, who said he knew Bugs Baer—personally.)

Reporter's son—Why we come here?

Man of the Month

By Walter Johnson.

Joe Haynes, Jimmy Bloodworth and Cecil Travis—they were the outstanding members of the Nats yesterday and virtually monopolized the Man of the Month awards on the basis of that game. Points were distributed as follows:

To Haynes, three points, because he held the Yankees to two hits and a single run in his four-inning relief role and singled sharply on his only two trips to bat. He struck out the side in the eighth.

To Bloodworth, three points, because he drove in a run with his triple against the centerfield wall, and because he saved at least four runs with his flash play at second base.

To Travis, two points, because he tripled and singled twice, driving in two runs.

To Sammy West, two points, because he pounded out a pair of two-baggers in the early innings when the Nats still appeared to be in the game. The totals:

Buddy Lewis	13	Charley Gelbert	3
Dutch Leonard	11	Mickey Vernon	3
Jimmy Bloodworth	9	Rick Ferrell	3
George Case	7	Joe Krakauskas	3
Sammy West	7	Joe Haynes	3
Ken Chase	6	Bobby Estalella	2

3 Favorites Join Welsh In Edgemoor Semifinal

By Jack Munhall.

After two days of wholesale upsets the Middle Atlantic States Tennis championships returned to normal at Edgemoor yesterday, and three favorites joined defending Champion Barney Welsh in the semifinal singles round.

Third-seeded Davie Johnsen repeated his City of Washington tournament victory over his friendly but determined rival, Buddy Adair, 6—4, 7—5. Second seeded Hugh Lynch disposed of Dick Murphy, upset conqueror of Frank Shore in the third round, 6—2, 6—2, and unseeded Sam Hayes polished off unseeded Ray Stocklinski, 6—1, 6—4.

Hayes, a teacher at the Sarah Lawrence School for Girls in Bronxville, N. Y., and formerly a high-ranking New England States star, is the lone surprise survivor. He turned in one of the major upsets of the tournament in the third round when he beat fifth-seeded C. Alphonso Smith.

Hayes' Number Up

Hayes' number appears to be up this afternoon, however, for he is scheduled to meet Welsh in one of only two matches scheduled. This will begin at 4 o'clock and will be followed immediately by a quarter-final doubles encounter between second-seeded Hugh Lynch and Davie Johnsen, and third-seeded Dick Murphy and Alphonso Smith.

The latter combination gained the round of eight yesterday by overcoming game DeWitt Smith and Harry Bashore, 7—5, 6—4, after trailing, 3-0, and 5-2 in the first set.

Once again the 29-year-old Hayes demonstrated the effectiveness of his peculiar looping forehand shot as he outsteadied Stocklinski at the baseline. The rallies were usually long, for Stocklinski was continually on the defensive and Hayes apparently was content to wait for an opening, which he usually got in a short return by his foe.

Lynch Unimpressive

The Bronxville teacher, as has been his habit in the only two local tournaments, was much more impressive in the first set than the second. In that first set he played near-flawless tennis and Stocklinski didn't win a game until Hayes led, 4—0. In the second sets Hayes seemed to tire rapidly, allowing Stocklinski to transform 3—0 and 4—2 deficits into 3—2 and 4—4 counts, respectively.

Johnsen, the 19-year-old George Washington student, and Adair, his stocky Edgemoor rival, suffered simultaneous off days and their match was far from good tennis. Both were overcautious and committed frequent errors and unless Johnsen perks up he would appear to have little chance of beating Lynch in their semifinal match tomorrow.

Lynch gave another of his steady, unspectacular performances in defeating Murphy with remarkable ease. Although Murphy used the proper strategy, according to Lynch's opponents, in playing almost exclusively to Lynch's backhand it availed little for he didn't have the overhead game to end the long, softball rallies.

Singles (quarter-finals)—Johnsen defeated Adair, 6—4, 7—5; Lynch defeated Murphy, 6—2, 6—2; Hayes defeated Stocklinski, 6—1, 6—4.

Doubles (quarter-finals)—Welsh and Mitchell defeated Turner and Ritzenberg, 6—2, 6—4; Alphonso Smith and Murphy defeated DeWitt Smith-Bashore, 7—5, 6—4.

TODAY'S SCHEDULE

Singles (semifinal), 4 p. m.—Welsh vs. Hayes.

Three Homers Beat Pirates For Cards, 5-3

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Aug. 9.—Home runs by Johnny Mize, Joe Medwick and Don Gutteridge were major factors in the St. Louis Cardinals, 5 to 3, victory over Pittsburgh today for their tenth consecutive victory.

Mize's twentieth of the season, in the sixth came with the bases empty but Don Gutteridge homered a few minutes later with the singling Terry Moore on first. Joe Medwick's tenth of the year ended the Cardinal scoring in the eighth.

Solters Collects 3 Hits, Drives in 3 Of Brownies' Runs

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Aug. 9.—Outfielder Julius Solters took revenge on the Cleveland Indians who sent him back to the St. Louis Browns, but the Tribe finally pulled out a 6-to-5 victory with a ninth inning rally.

Solters collected three hits today and drove in three of the Brownies' runs. His eighth-inning double brought in two tallies to tie the score at 4-4.

St. Louis took a one-run lead in the ninth when George McQuinn doubled to bring Don Heffner home. But the Tribe came back with Lou Boudreau's single and Bruce Campbell's double and Ben Chapman drove them in with another double.

Bill Trotter was charged with the loss and Joe Dobson, who relieved Johnny Allen with none out in the eighth, got the victory.

Red Sox Rally Twice, Beat A's 5-3 and 6-5

Foxx Hits Homer No. 30 and Cronin Swats No. 14 at Boston

By the Associated Press

Boston, Aug. 9.—The Boston Red Sox courageously came from behind twice today to take two games from the Philadelphia A's, 5 to 3, and 6 to 5, and gain half a game on the league-leading New York Yankees, whom they now trail by 6½ games.

Coming up with the score tied at 3-3 in the last of the eighth inning of the opener, Jimmy Foxx parked his thirtieth homer of the year in the centerfield bleachers. Then, after one man was out, Joe Cronin followed with another round ripper—his fourteenth—into the leftfield screen to make the score 5-3, and the Sox retained this lead until the end.

The Sox trailed by 5 to 4 going into the last of the ninth inning of the second game. But Johnny Peacock led off with a single against Nelson Potter. Manager Cronin immediately sent in Leo Nonnenkamp to run for Peacock, and Ostermueller, the winning pitcher, bunted Nonny to second. Doerr's single scored the tying run, and the Sox refused to rest there.

Cramer punched a one-baser into right, putting Doerr on third, and then Foxx walked for the third time during the game to fill the bases.

That set the stage for Ted Williams, who was benched yesterday for indifferent running on the basepaths, to bounce a long single off the leftfield wall and send Doerr in with the deciding tally.

Marcum Hurt As Tigers Beat Chisox, 10-3

Hurler Hit in Face By Ball; Rowe Wins 5th With 7-Hit Work

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Aug. 9.—Schoolboy Rowe held the Chicago White Sox to seven hits today in pitching the Detroit Tigers to a 10-to-3 victory and demonstrating once more that he has regained much of his former effectiveness.

MARCUM

It was Rowe's fifth win of the season. He has lost nine games.

Jack Knott, who started for Chicago, was removed after four innings and succeeded by Johnny Marcum. In the seventh Marcum was felled by a batted ball and painfully injured. Rookie Harry Boyles finished. Knott was the losing pitcher.

Pete Fox hit a freak home run inside the park in the second. Joe Kuhel, of the Sox, hit one into the stands in the eighth. The bases were unoccupied both times. Fox also hit a double and a single and drove in three runs.

Marcum was struck in the face by a drive from the bat of Hank Greenberg. He was carried unconscious from the field. In the clubhouse he was revived, and Dr. A. H. Whittaker took four stitches over his right eye before sending him to Harper Hospital for overnight observation and X-ray examination.

Hash Beats Gilded Knight by Three Lengths at Saratoga

Four Noted 3-Year-Olds Badly Beaten

Sun Lover Third And Meda Fourth; Winner Collects Purse of $3,350

By the Associated Press

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Aug. 9.—Showing the same stretch running ability that he displayed when he finished second in the Empire City Handicap at Empire City and the Yankee Handicap at Suffolk Downs (stakes won by Lovely Night and Challedon, respectively), Mrs. Payne Whitney's Hash easily defeated four other 3-year-olds in the fiftieth Kenner Stakes here today. Three lengths behind came the Wheatley Stable's Gilded Knight to head the Millsdale Stable's Sun Lover out of second money.

Hash, carrying only 110 pounds as compared to the 123 burden on Gilded Knight and Sun Lover, was a slight choice over the Millsdale colt at 3 to 2. He collected a purse of $3,350 and stepped the distance in 1:58, not menacing the track or stakes record.

The first three to finish are potential candidates for the famed Travers of 1¼ miles, to be run August 19. Johnstown and Eight Thirty are the advance favorites for that fixture.

Gilded Knight, showing something like his top form for the first time since he finished second to Challedon in the Pdeakness, was hustled into a length lead over Invader. The Wheatley colt widened his advantage to four lengths while disposing of his early pursuer. Hash, well behind in third place on the bask stretch, moved up at the far turn and managed to slip through on the rail around the bend.

Hash overtook Gilded Knight after straightening for home and bounded clear inside the last furlong. Sun Lover, beaten a neck by Challedon and an easy second over Johnstown in the Arlington Classic, challenged too late. He was allowed to rate along most of the trip but closed steadily and would have beaten Gilded Knight in another stride or two.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DEPINARD, $6.80, $2.50, $2.40; VERITAS, $2.40, $2.30; BY SURPRISE, $8.10.

DEPINARD, a slow beginner, was taken wide into backstretch, saved ground at stretch turn when VERITAS raced wide and came out at end. VERITAS twice raced wide at stretch turn, which cost her the race. BY SURPRISE, well up from break, had no excuses. BRIGHT BRIAN, in trouble early, closed samely under punishment.

Daily Double, Mamie's Lad and Depinard, Paid $79.50.

THIRD RACE—About 2 miles. Purse, $55. The Potomac Steeplechase. For maiden 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:25. Off 3:26½. Winner, R. L. Pearson's b. g. On Fishing

We have been down to Ocean City again after the elusive (for us, anyway,) white marlin. On Saturday, when only seven fish were brought in, we saw five rise to the baits, in spite of the comments of the boatmen along the dock to the effect the Lev-Lou wouldn't see any fish that day; and one, weighing close to 70 pounds, was boated. In fact, we always have a fair share of rises—to the boat, though; not the bait we happen to be fishing. This day failed to prove any exception.

ACKERMAN

On Sunday that fickle "Lady Luck" still had her head turned away, for there wasn't the slightest indication that it might be the day, and we turned homeward—50 was the count for the day.

Capt. Cliff Jester brought in five on his Catherine M. Now five, for many of the boats, isn't a day out of the ordinary. For Cliff—well, we had better say very little about that now, for up until a week ago he was a blue and bottom fisherman—and a good one. When the big run was on, so insistent was one party for a boat that the whole dock chipped in and rigged him out for marlin. A rod that had seen better days here, a well-worn reel there. Even to outriggers, the boys contributed, and the party fared forth.

When evening came—with it came Capt. Cliff, and lo, he was top boat of them all, with nine pieces of his short-tail—makeshift marlin flags—flying from his makeshift rigging.

Luck—for want of a better word—such as this isn't lightly ignored, and as long as the marlin run lasts there is an A1 bluefisherman who will be following the big bill fish.

Middle Atlantic P. G. A. Tournament Opened to Amateurs

Prize Money May Reach Record Total

Doerer Offers $150 for District Open Tourney; P. G. A. Now 'Open'

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The Middle Atlantic P. G. A. tournament, that under Al Houghton's promotion may be played for the biggest purse in the history of a local professional event, will be opened to amateurs, and the name altered to the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. Open Tournament, it was learned yesterday.

Houghton, who promoted the tourney the last two years at Old Point Comfort, Va., is selling advertisements on the P. G. A. program to local, Baltimore and Richmond businessmen who are associated with the game. He already has pocketed some $800 in checks, which will be turned into prize money, and has sent letters to each professional in this city and two States, asking them to sell a page, worth $40, to their members.

30 to Split Pot

If all his angles turn out, the money may exceed the $2,500 purse for the past National Capital Open. Over half the pro entrants will receive a share of the prize money, as the purse will be split some 30 ways, with the winner's share probably amounting to between $600 and $800.

Three local courses are under consideration, with the dates tentatively set for late September.

It is tthe first yaer in the history of the event that it has been open to amateurs, and the plan is to create more interest, more than double the entries, and added prestige to the event. If an amateur should win the tourney, the first pro to finish will pocket the prize money and be known as Mid-Atlantic P. G. A. champion. The simon-pures will play for suitable prizes.

100 May Play

Although the date will more than likely be too late for the high school and college stars among the leading amateurs in the Midatlantic section, the amateurs who will play may boost the field near the 100 mark. Pro entries will be restricted to P. G. A. members, in good standing.

While the tournament will be the highlight of the competitive card here in the fall, Tommy Doerer, jr., manager of the East Potomac course, has placed a $150 bid for the District Open to be posted by S. G. Leoffler, jr., public links concessionaire.

The open has been a tournament stepchild here for the past few years, and the local pros have played for little more than entry fees. Two years ago the Sunday exhibition matches added a few dollars to the purse and last year the Washington Golf and Country Club boosted the pot.

Plans are tentative, although East Potomac would be host to the tournament, on an October date. If all the scheduled affairs go through in the Middle Atlantic P. G. A., "Gerald Grosner" pro-amateur and the District Open, the pros and leading amateurs in this sector will set a new high in tournament competition and purses for September and October.

'Cobra' Singh Faces Terror

Nanjo Singh, who deals in cobra clutches, will attempt to portray a "Jack the Giant Killer" role tonight when he steps in the ring at Turner's arena to exchange assortments of groans and neck-twisting holds with the Golden Terror.

The Terror, who coyly hides his massive, 303-pound hulk under a faded orange and black uniform and hood, is returning to the local scene virtually from out of nowhere. He was tossed there some weeks ago by Jimmy Londos in a boresome exhibition that will be hard put for a sequel tonight.

Supporting this 90-minute reign of terror will be five preliminaries featuring various types of broken-down wrestling gentlemen—mainly Chief Chewaki against Jack Hader, Juan Ologuival against Bibber McCoy, Raoul Lopez against Rudy Stronberg, Tom Mahoney against Pete Managoff and Ernie Powers against Red Ryan.

New Unlimited Champ Scores—Off in D. C. Recreation 85-Pound Class

It was hot, all right, but the weather had nothing to do with the heated competition in the finals yesterday of the D. C. Recreational Department's swimming meet at Tech pool. The boys are getting off to a flying start (above) in the 25-yard freestyle for 85-pounders. At the left—Wilbur Slater, 18-year-old from Anacostia pool, wins the freestyle in the unlimited class. He was one of many new champions crowned yesterday

Rosedale, Francis Win Pool Meet

1938 Champs Repeat In Recreation Races At Tech, Banneker

Rosedale Pool, 1938 champion in the D. C. Recreation Department's city-wide swim meet, swept to a repeat victory yesterday at Tech Pool with a total of 68½ points. Southeast was its nearest competition, totalling 54½ points, and Anacostia, Takoma, Georgetown, Tech and East Potomac pools followed in that order.

Its second team victory in a row was also scored by Francis among the colored tanks, its winning total being 83 points against 30 for Banneker, the pool at which the finals were staged, and 28 for Dunbar.

Record crowds attended the proceedings at both finals. At Tech, mothers and friends of the young Weismullers jammed the sidelines, screeching for their favorites and taking short dips when the guards weren't watching.

An extra importance was lent the races when Bob Duncan, of the swimming division of the Red Cross, took over the microphone and kept up a running fire of comment on developments.

Rosedale's speedy brothers, Mickey and Manuel Fontana, supplied its only first places in the 70 and 85 pound classes, each winning the 25-yard sidestroke in his weight. George Essex came along in the 115-pound class to win Rosedale's next first place, and he wasn't through until he had helped his team to second place in the 100-yard relay in that weight, and first place in the 135-pound division.

Washington Seeks Union Printer Golf Tourney in 1940

The 1940 tournament of the Union Printer's International Golf Association may come to this city if the plans of C. E. Purdy and Edgar A. Merkle, third vice president of the third largest golf body in this country, are successful in the annual meeting Sunday night in Cincinnati.

Between 20 and 25 local golfers will leave Saturday for the sixteenth annual tourney over the Summit Hills course in Cincinnati, Monday, August 14, through Thursday, August 17. Four 18-hole rounds will complete the 72-hole medal play grind.

Merkle, a former champion and active member of the association for years, and Purdy expected opposition from Detroit and a Florida city, either Miami, Tampa or Jacksonville, in securing the event for a local club next year. The course would probably be Beaver Dam.

Joe Balestri, champion of the Allied Trades Division for the past two years, will lead the District representation in this year's tournament, while Fred Stringer, Merkle and E. B. Heimer are expected to be in the running for the two-man trophy.

Army-Navy Swim Meet Slated Sunday

The sixth annual Army-Navy swimming meet will be held Sunday at the Service Club, with 14 events on the card, including dashes, relays and diving.

Joseph Lyman, former intercollegiate champion, and local Titleholder Bill Tarbett will give exhibition diving. Championship cups will be presented high scorers among the men and women entries.

When the break finally did come he broke in front, and then dropped back into second slot as Cherry Hanover, fleet filly from Lawrence B. Sheppard's Hanover, Pa., farms showed the way past the quarter pole in 30½ seconds.

Coming into the half-mile marker in 1:04, Parshall took out around the Hanover filly and from then on led the procession, hitting the three quarter post in 1:35¼. The battle was for second place as they came down the stretch, with Parshall taking a snug hold on Peter.

Gauntlet, driven by Vic Fleming, of Syracuse, and never far off the pace, staved off the bid of E. Roland Harriman's Bagpiper by a half-length, with The Abbot close behind in fourth position.

There was no delay in the starting of the second heat, but it was trotted much in the same manner. Once again Peter stepped away in front. This time, however, he held away to the quarter in 31¼ seconds. Then Henry Thomas, winner the last two years with Sheppard's Owners, decided it was time to let Cherry Hanover step.

Tempo Stepped Up

She did for 100 yards, and then faded back as Peter Astra stepped up the tempo and passed the half mile post in 1:02¼, a length in front. Once again it was a contest for runner-up honors, with Peter piling on the pressure through the last half mile. He was at the three-quarter pole in 1:34¼ and far out in front.

Through the stretch he breezed, gaining with each stride. Gauntlet came out of the pack to finish second in front of Sir Walter, a rank outsider owned by J. J. McIntyre, of Cleveland. Gauntlet's share of the purse was $7,760.49. The third place finish gave Sir Walter third money of $4,656.30, though he was fifth in the opening brush.

Bill Holt Wins Golf Medal At Syracuse

By the Associated Press

Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 9.—"Trailer Bill" Holt, the hometown pride, won the qualifying medal today in the Eastern amateur golf tournament, but the real victor when the firing ceased was Mr. Par.

Out of the field of 80-odd golfers, only one—Frank Michalek, of Gloversville, N. Y.—was able to equal par 71 for the Syracuse Yacht Club course as a stiff breeze off Oneida Lake combined with heavy fairways to make scoring difficult.

A first round 81 gave Michalek a grand total of 152, but left him in the select circle of 64 who will start match play tomorrow.

Holt, who won fame earlier in the summer by going to the semifinals of the British Amateur, tacked a 72 onto a first-round 71 to give him a 1-over-par aggregate of 143 for the 36 holes.

He finished one stroke ahead of Jimmy Scott, the 23-year-old Louisville, Ky., lad who led the field yesterday with a 70—the only sub-par round turned in thus far during the tourney.

Scott destroyed his chances for the medal when he drove out of bounds on the 440-yard ninth hole. Even then he might have come through had he not taken two strokes to come out of a shallow trap on the fifteenth.

Morton McCarthy, of Richmond, Va., and Otto Greiner, of Baltimore, won their way into match play rounds by carding 36-hole qualifying scores of 154 and 155 respectively.

Cincinnati Loses, 20-7, To D. C. Typos

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 9.—After dropping a 12 to 11 heart-breaker to Detroit in the replayed tenth inning of a protested International Printers championship game, the Washington Printers nine pounded out a 20-to-7 victory in seven innings today over Cincinnati.

The victory kept Washington, defending champion, in the running, but eliminated Cincinnati from the twenty-ninth annual Union Printers International Baseball Tournament.

The victors smeared the Rhinelander hurlers for 21 hits. Halloran led the Capitol City boys attack with five hits, including a triple and a homer.

Washington scored 10 runs in the first three frames to salt away the contest, and piled up seven more in the sixth inning, after scoring three in the fourth and fifth, just for good measure.

Washington meets Indianapolis tomorrow.

Stock Seat $52,000, Decline of $10,000

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—Transfer of a seat in the New York Stock Exchange was arranged today at $52,000, a drop of $10,000 from the previous sale and only $1,000 above the year's low on April 11. Highest price for the year thus far was $70,000, paid on March 8.

Loew's Inc. Borrow $15,000,000 From Private Sources

New York, Aug. 9.—Loew's Inc. today announced that it has borrowed privately $15,000,000 for the refunding of a subsidiary and for additional working capital, through a bank loan of $3,750,000 and an issue of $11,250,000 of bonds which was purchased by two life insurance companies.

The new bond financing is represented by an issue of $11,250,000 of first lien 3½ per cent bonds of Loew's Theater & Realty Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Loew's Inc. The issue has been purchased in its entirety by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. and the Equitable Life Assurance Society. A sinking fund will operate after 5 years to retire $400,000 of the bonds semiannually during the final ten years of the term of the issue.

Approximately $7,000,000 of the proceeds of the new financing will be used to retire, on September 15, 1939, the outstanding first lien 6 per cent gold bonds of Loew's Theater & Realty Corporation, due 1946. The balance of the proceeds will be additional capital, to be used for future needs.

Increased Use Of Machines Urged To Boost Wages

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—Prosperity in the United States has always been "machine-made," says J. H. Van Deventer, editor of the Iron Age.

Urging faster mechanization of industry in the current issue of the steel publication, he points out Michigan "with the greatest concentration of machinery and ultra-modern efficiency in the world, ranks highest of all States in weekly wage rates, according to the Bureau of Labor statistics."

"Time-saving machinery increases real wages and has shortened the working week," he said, citing the following:

The average factory worker last year had to work only 9.4 hours to earn a tire for a small car, compared with 45.9 in 1914; 1,095 hours for an automobile, compared with 4,514 in 1914 and 323.4 hours to buy a year's clothing for a family of four compared with 708.5 in 1914.

Business Index Scores Sharp Rise

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—Time Magazine's index of business conditions rose sharply this week from 95.8 to 100.1, its highest level since the middle of January.

Greatly increased spending in trade centers more than offset a slight decline in financial center spending and was responsible for the substantial rise in the index, which is designed to reflect changes in underlying factors likely to affect the volume of business.

Wheat Prices Hold Steady, Trading Dull

Rise at Winnipeg Results in Mild Early Rally

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 9.—The wheat market was sluggish today and prices showed litle change at the close.

The trend was fractionally lower at the opening but there was no heavy selling despite a weak Liverpool market and additional reports of rain and cooler weather in the Canadian spring wheat territory.

An early decline of as much as ¾ cent prompted scattered buying. Independent strength at Winnipeg in the fact of favorable weather and crop reports caused slight rallies here around midsession.

At the close wheat was unchanged to ⅛ lower compared with yesterday's finish. September 63½@63⅝, December 64@64½; corn was unchanged to ¼ off, September 42½, December 41½; oats ¼ lower to ⅛ higher; soy beans ¾@1½ cents off; rye unchanged, and lard down 15 cents to new seasonal lows.

Other domestic markets were off fractionally but Winnipeg closed ⅛@½ higher. Liverpool closed ½@¾ lower, depressed by the pressure of offerings from the Southern Hemisphere.

Open Market To Supply Cotton For Spanish Order

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—The 250,000 bales of American raw cotton to be shipped to mills in Spain through financing arranged by the Export-Import Bank this week will be purchased in the open market, and not specifically withdrawn from United States Government loan stocks, Warren Lee Pierson, president of the bank, said today.

The shipments are expected to start immediately, he added. Interest rate on financing the shipments, he said, would probably be set at 3½ per cent.

Asked about the possibility of similar arrangements being made by the bank for shipments of American cotton to other European countries, Pierson singled out Germany as a potential buyer. The Reich, he said, already has commercial private bank credits in this country.

Stocks Ease as Trade Continues Stagnant; Aviations React After Early Advance Based on Federal Contract Awards

New York, Aug. 9.—Stocks weakened throughout today's session, opening lower and adding to their losses as the day progressed. The net decline was of small proportions, however, and trading was dull, only 467,310 shares changing hands on the big board. The composite average recorded a loss of 0.41 point, with all groups contributing, even the aviations, which staged a small rally for a time on the basis of new contracts being let by the Government.

Domestic political news, which for weeks has been helping to shape the course of security prices was at a low ebb. The best that the news ticker could produce was a headline "Roosevelt Asks Economies.' This startling information fell very definitely into the classification of "Man Bites Dog," but even at that it failed to spur anything in the financial channels. Such work as has been done in the cause of economy came during the last few days of Congress, and it was asked by the Administration.

Lack of Trading Unexplained

In these days of the doldrums the street has plenty of time to cogitate on the whys and wherefores of the lack of investment and speculative interest. By all the rules of thumb there should be some of the multitude of holders of securities who would like to switch their holdings of National Suspender preferred into the debentures of American Keyhole, Inc., but such is not the case; there is an uncommon willingness to keep the safe deposit box locked.

In this connection an informal survey as to the cause has just been completed by a New York concern closely identified with the financial district. Its findings cannot be looked upon as a "Gallup Poll,' for it was too restricted. Questionnaires were sent only to individuals in the New York area and to those whose incomes were thought to be between $5,000 and $20,000 annually. About a thousand replies were received.

Results of Poll

The results prove interesting, however. The question underlying three specific questions asked concerning the unwillingness of this income group to buy stocks.

On the question whether the recipient believed that general business would continue to improve during the last half of 1939, 78.57 per cent replied in the affirmative, 14.29 per cent in the negative, and 7.14 per cent offered no opinion. On the question as to what are the main reasons why you are not investing funds now idle, the explanations given were as follows: "New Deal" 30.23 per cent; insecurity of the dollar, 18.6 per cent; investment yields too low, 16.28 per cent; European situation, 11.63 per cent; heavy taxes, 9.3 per cent; labor troubles, 6.98 per cent, and miscellaneous.

In answer to the question, "What is the best means of investing under present conditions," the replies gave first choices in the following order: Common stocks, 33 per cent; United States Government bonds, 17 per cent; real estate, 13 per cent; savings banks, 13 per cent; annuities, 10 per cent; bonds, 7 per cent, and the remainder miscellaneous. Of this miscellaneous remainder, 4.35 per cent reported mortgages and 1.45 per cent made no answer.

In the second paragraph above of the miscellaneous remainder 4.65 per cent reported they had no idle capital and 2.33 per cent said they were not investing on advice of counsel.

General Motors was the most active stock in today's trading, but its price change was negligible. Loft lost a fraction. Goodrich was strong as the result of a favorable earning statement, closing up a point. Losses of a point or more were sustained by Commonwealth & Southern preferred, Du Pont, Harvester, Manville, Kennecott, Loew's Union Pacific and Westinghouse. Allied Chemical, in the higher priced bracket, broke 3¼.

All Bond Groups Decline

Although investment bankers found the going smooth with offerings of new high-grade bonds, the listed market for senior securities remained dispirited today. Excellent results were reported on the $123,500,000 Pennsylvania Power and Light bonds, and $4,100,000 Central Ohio Light and Power obligations, which appeared on the market early in the day. But all departments of the listed bond market drifted slowly downward in a turnover of only $4,360,000.

Treasury Issues Dip

United States Treasury bonds dipped 1-32 to 9-32 point, partly on the European crisis news and partly on the prospective new borrowing next month. Losses were most pronounced among issues due in about ten years. Guaranteed bonds of the Farm and Home Corporations also were soft. Best rated utility, railroad and industrial bonds showed fractional losses, where changed.

Medium-priced railroad bonds were under mild pressure, the losses being mostly fractional. Borderline and default rails were similarly easy. B. M. T. bonds were steady in the local traction group, but Interborough and Manhattan Railway issues dipped. Holding company and industrial convertible issues followed the equity trend downward. Communications bonds were dull, and other special groups remained neglected.

Latin-American default bonds attracted a little attention and managed to stage small gains. German and Italian issues softened, but Polish bonds held their ground despite the European worries about war. The Japanese group drifted lower by fractions, and entered fresh territory. Scandinavian, Australian and other high grade foreigns were firm.

Steel Output Rise Expected To Continue

Iron Age Reviews Optimism Based on Auto Labor Peace

Cleveland, Aug. 9.—A one-point rise in steel ingot production to 61 per cent, highest since last November, 1938 and a further gain in scrap prices bear out expectations of a higher trend for steel business during the late summer and early fall, says Iron Age today in its weekly survey.

The General Motors strike settlement has not yet had an important effect on steel releases by that company as preparation of dies for new models must precede the taking of steel in large tonnage, but demand for increased volume by General Motors is expected before the end of the month, the review states.

The report adds that oil and gas companies have taken more pipe line tonnage this year than since 1937, but there is room for improvement so far as the public utilities and railroads are concerned. However, several thousand railroad cars may be inquired for in the near future.

The survey points out that the outstanding significance of current steel business is the great diversification of orders, both as to products and the range of industries from which the orders come. The industry is hopeful of higher operating rates as soon as automobile tonnage is sufficient to make itself felt.

"Six blast furnaces have gone in since the first of the month, two Carnegie-Illinois and two Jones & Laughlin, in the Pittsburgh district, and two Carnegie-Illinois, in the Chicago district. These are in addition to a revised figure of 129 that were active on August 1. Pig iron capacity was operated last month at 53.8 per cent of capacity, compared with 54.50 per cent for steel ingots, suggesting the possibility of increased ratio of pig iron to scrap in open-hearth melting because of high scrap prices."

A WOMAN'S TOUCH AT SUCH A TIME IS Priceless

Bereavement often is a time of emotional stress characterized by demands on a mortician that may tax his facilities and experience. A frequent request is for a lady assistant . . . a woman's touch . . . in a situation, that seems peculiarly feminine.

Hysong's have 3 lady assistants on duty, so that at least one is available at all times for the convenience and better service of our clients.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Buffalo Bill, W. Howard Woolworth, filled in the moments between boards, describing the play of a hand in a recent upstate tournament. The hand, which concerns declarer's play for six hearts, is shown with the bidding in today's box. Here is the way Buffalo Bill told it:

Intricate card play at the Conneaut Lake mixed team of four championship defeated nine declarers at six hearts; seven played heart game contracts with variant results, four making five-odd and three six-odd. Jeff Glick, nationally known Cleveland tournament star, and Henry Van Praag, ranking Pittsburgh player, were the only two players who bid and made six hearts. Glick, partnered with Mrs. Vera Kramer, of Erie, Pa., made the hand this way.

West opened the two hearts to the queen in the closed hand. The ace of spades and the ace and king of diamonds were laid down in that order and a small club discarded from the board. The dummy reversal procedure was continued by giving up a club trick at this point, leading the two of clubs from the closed hand, East winning with the king.

East returned the five of hearts to the jack on the board, and when West played the nine, Glick correctly marked the one outstanding trump in the East hand. The king of spades was laid down from the board, and when West dropped the queen, East was marked with having originally five spades and three hearts. The jack of spades was played and the six of clubs chucked from the closed hand for the eighth trick. The four of spades was ruffed with the ten of hearts and after laying down the club ace, the seven of diamonds was ruffed on the board with the six of hearts.

The ace and king of hearts completed the seesaw (cross-ruff), declarer making six hearts.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

HERE ARE HOW the numbers of employes in the Executive branch of Government in Washington have stepped along, without a stumble, since June, 1938: June, 115,628; July, 116,231; August, 117,054; September, 118,172; October, 118,455; November, 119,107; December, 120,852; January, 1939, 120,229; February, 120,445; March, 120,873; April, 122,003; May, 122,792, and June, 123,505.

THE CIVIL Service Commission announces an open competitive examination for the job of master mechanic, forge shop, in the Naval Gun Factory, Navy Yard, Washington. The salary is $13.24 a day; Monday is the deadline on applications.

THE AMERICAN Federation of Government Employes is still urging its lodges, nation-wide to submit resolutions for the annual convention to be held September 11 at Atlantic City. A few have come in. A series from Coatesville, Pa., Lodge 120, calling for a $1,500 minimum salary for veterans' hospital attendants, with regular automatic salary increases and optional quarters, subsistence and laundry. The administrator of the Veterans Administration will be one of the speakers at the convention and probably will touch on the internal workings of his organization. A second resolution from the same source calls for the abolition of the present efficiency rating system, and a third for automatic promotion of Grade B attendants to Grade A after one year's service. There is further a resolution asking optional relief from Q. S. L. (quarters-subsistence-laundry) charges when employes are not actually on duty. Other speakers will include Civil Service President Harry H. Mitchell, Senator O'Mahoney, William Green and Representative Ramspeck.

COMMANDER Robert D. Beeton, of the U. S. Treasury Post, No. 35, of the American Legion, will head the post's delegation to the department convention opening today at the Mayflower Hotel. At a meeting of the post held earlier this week he was designated, and was also renominated for another term as post commander.

Other convention delegates from this post are Mary M. Becker, Thacker V. Walker, Ralph U. Graves and Charles Daley.

APPROVAL of a base bid by Nathan Straus, administrator of the United States Housing Authority, has cleared the way for construction of 174 dwelling units in the Griffin Park project in Orlando, Fla., and the demolition of approximately 72 shanties.

The base bid, recommended by the housing authority of the City of Orlando, was for general construction and demolition, including plumbing, electrical work and site improvement, by Langston Construction Co. of Orlando, $354,420.

By mid-August the transformation is due to be in progress, and within approximately nine months the project will be completed, with one and two-story row houses with concrete block walls, concrete floors and sloping shingled roofs. Gardens, recreational areas and a spray pool for the children will be maintained by the tenants under the direction of the Orlando Housing Authority.

EMPLOYES of the Bureau of Old-Age Insurance, Social Security Board, will celebrate the fourth anniversary of the SSB act and the passage of the new amendments at a get-together party sponsored by local 10, UFWA, tonight. The party will be held at the headquarters, 532 Seventeenth street northwest. There will be free beer and dancing.

PULITZER PRIZE NOVEL

THE YEARLING

By Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

Chapter LXV

THE LAKE was rosy, but shadows had taken over the land. It would be supper time at home. In spite of his nausea, he thought now of food. His stomach began to ache as though there was too much in it, instead of nothing. He remembered the smell of the fisherman's meat and biscuit. His mouth watered. He ate some stalks of grass. He ripped the joints with his teeth, as animals ripped flesh. Instantly he saw creatures creeping in to Flag's carcass. He vomited the grass.

Darkness filled both land and water. A hoot owl cried in the thicket near him. He shivered. The night wind stirred and was chill. He heard a rustling that might be leaves moving ahead of the wind, or small creatures passing. He was not afraid. It seemed to him that if a bear came, or a panther, he might touch it and stroke it and it would understand his grief. Yet the night sounds about him made his flesh creep. It would be good to have a camp fire. Penny could start a fire even without his tinder-horn, in the way the Indians did, but he had never been able to do it. If Penny were here, there would be a blazing fire, and warmth and food and comfort. He was not afraid. He was only desolate. He pulled the moss over him and cried himself to sleep.

The sun awakened him, and the red-winged blackbirds chattering in the reeds. He stood up and pulled the long strands of moss from his hair and clothing. He was weak and dizzy. Now that he was rested, he knew that he was hungry. The thought of food was torture. Cramps struck like small hot knives across his stomach. He thought of paddling back up the run to Mis' Nellie Ginright and asking her to feed him. But she would ask him questions. She would ask him why he was here alone, and there was no answer, except that his father had betrayed him, and in the betrayal, Flag was dead. It would be better to go on as he had planned.

A fresh wave of loneliness swept over him. He had lost Flag and he had lost his father, too. The gaunt little man he had last seen crouched in pain in the kitchen doorway, calling for help to stand, was a stranger. He pushed out his dug-out and took up his paddle and headed for the open waters. He was out in the world, and it seemed to him that he was alien here, and alone, and that he was being carried away into a void. He paddled for the location where he had seen the steamer pass. Living was no longer the grief behind him, but the anxiety ahead. Leaving the mouth of the creek behind him, he found the wind freshening. Out from the shelter of the land a brisk breeze was blowing. He ignored the gnawing in his belly and paddled desperately. The wind caught the dug-out and slewed it around. He could not keep it headed. The waves were mounting. Their soft lapping changed to a hissing. They began to break over the bow of the canoe. When it swung sideways they washed in and it tipped and rolled. There was an inch of water across the bottom. There was no vessel of any sort in sight.

HE LOOKED BACK. The shore had receded alarmingly. Ahead of him, the open water seemed to stretch without an end. He turned about in a panic and paddled madly for the shore. It would be best, after all, to go back up the creek and get help from Mis' Nellie Ginright. It might be better even to walk to Fort Gates and make his way from there. The wind behind him helped him, and it seemed to him that he could feel the north-bound current of the great river. He headed for an opening that must be the end of the Salt Springs run. When he reached it, it was a blind opening in the shore that led only into swamp. The mouth of the run was nowhere to be found.

He was trembling from his exertion and from his fear. He told himself that he was not lost, for the river ran north out of Lake George and came at the end to Jacksonville, and he had only to follow it. But it was so wide, and the shore line was so confusing. He rested a long time, then began to paddle slowly north, close to the thick-cypressed land, following the endless curves and bays and indentations. The gnawing in his stomach was an acute pain. He began to have a feverish vision of the usual Baxter table. He saw slices of ham steaming, brown and dripping in their own juice. He smelled the sweet savor. He saw tawny biscuits and dark-crusted cornbread and swimming bowls of cow-peas, with squares of white bacon floating among them. He smelled fried squirrel so definitely that the saliva ran in his mouth. He tasted the warm foam of Trixie's milk. He could have fought with the dogs for their pan of cold grits and gravy.

This, then, was hunger. This was what his mother had meant when she had said, "We'll all go hongry." He had laughed, for he had thought he had known hunger, and it was faintly pleasant. He knew now that it had been only appetite. This was another thing. The thing was terrifying. It had a great maw to envelop him and claws that raked across his vitals. He fought off a new panic. He would soon reach a cabin or a fisherman's camp, he told himself. He would beg food shamelessly before continuing. No man refused another rations.

He worked his way north along the shore line all day. In the late afternoon he was sick at his stomach from the heat of the sun, but there was nothing to vomit but the river water he had drunk. A cabin showed ahead among trees and he pulled in to it hopefully. It was deserted. He prowled inside, like a hungry 'coon or 'possum. There were cans on a dusty shelf, but all were empty. In a jar he found a cupful of musty flour. He mixed it with water and ate the paste. It was flavorless, even in his hunger, but it stopped the pain in his stomach. There were birds and squirrels in the trees and he tried to hit them with stones, but he only drove them all away. He was feverish and exhausted and the flour in his belly made him sleepy. The cabin offered shelter, and he made a pallet of some rags, from which the roaches scurried. He slept a drugged, nightmare-ridden sleep.

IN THE MORNING he was again conscious of acute hunger, and the cramps were sharp-nailed fingers that twisted his entrails. He found some last year's acorns that the squirrels had buried and ate them so ravenously that the hard, unchewed pieces were fresh knives in his contracting stomach. A lethargy settled on him, and he could scarcely force himself to take up his paddle. If the current had not been with him, he decided he could have gone no farther. He covered only a short distance during the morning. In the afternoon, three boats passed in mid-stream. He stood up and waved his arms and shouted. They paid no attention to his cries. When they had passed from sight, he was torn unwillingly with sobbing. He decided to cut out away from the shore to intercept the next vessel. The wind had died. The water was calm. The glare from it burned his face and neck and bare arms. The sun was scalding. His head throbbed. Black spots alternated before his eyes with bobbing golden balls. A thin humming whined in his ears. The humming snapped.

All that he knew when he opened his eyes was that it was dark and he was being lifted up.

A man's voice said, "He ain't drunk. It's a boy."

Another said, "Lay him in the bunk there. He's sick. Tie his dug-out on behind."

Jody looked up. He lay in a bunk on what must be the mailboat. A lamp flickered on the wall. A man leaned over him.

"What's the matter, young un? We near about run you down in the dark."

He tried to answer but his lips were swollen.

A voice called from above, "Try him on somethin' to eat."

"You hungry, boy?"

He nodded. The boat was now in motion. The man in the cabin clattered at the galley-stove. Jody saw a thick cup thrust in front of him. He lifted his head and clutched at it. The cup held cold soup, thick and greasy. For a mouthful or two it had no taste at all. Then the saliva ran in his mouth and his whole being reached out for it, and he bolted it so ravenously that he choked on bits of meat and potato.

The man said curiously, "How long since you et?"

"I don't know."

"Give him plenty but feed him slow. Don't give him too much or he'll puke in my bunk."

The cup came back again, and biscuits with it. He tried to control himself, but he trembled when the man waited too long between feedings. The third cupful tasted infinitely better than the first, then further food was refused him.

The man said, "Where'd you come from?"

"A LANGOUR crept over him. He breathed deeply. The swinging lamp drew his eyes back and forth. He closed them. He dropped into a sleep as deep as the river.

He was awakened by the stopping of the small steamer. He thought for a moment that he was in the dug-out, drifting with the current. He got to his feet and rubbed his eyes. He looked at the galley-stove and remembered the soup and biscuits. The ache in his stomach was gone. He climbed the few steps to the open deck. Day was breaking. The mail sack was being lowered to a landing. He recognized Volusia. The captain turned to him.

"You had a close call, young feller. Now what did you say your name was, and where do you think you're goin'?"

"I was headin' for Boston," he said.

"You know where Boston lies? So far north it'd take you the rest of your life to get there, the way you was travelin.'"

Jody stared.

"Hurry up, now. This is a gov'ment boat. I can't wait on you all day. Where you live?"

"Baxter's Island."

"Never heard of no Baxter's Island in this river."

The mate spoke up.

"Tain't a real island, Cap. It's a place off in the scrub. 'Bout 15 miles up the road from here."

"Then you want to get off here, boy. Boston? Hell. You got folks?"

Jody nodded.

"They know where you was goin'?"

He shook his head.

"Runnin' away, eh? Well, if I was a scrawny little big-eyed booger like you, I'd stay home. Nobody but your folks'll bother with a little ol' shirt-tail boy like you. Swing him down to the dock Joe."

"Turn his dug-out a-loose. Catch it, boy. Let's go."

Federal Union Asks Assurances FWA Will 'Deal'

Guarantees that officials would not refuse to deal with grievance committees of the United Federal Workers of America were requested Tuesday by a U. F. W. A. committee, meeting with Administrator John Carmody, of the Federal Works Agency.

The committee, which also represented the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians, asked further (a) that assurances be given that intimidation would not be used to keep employes from joining the union, (b) that the FWA give first preference in filling new jobs to employes dismissed as a result of reorganization, and (c) that a uniform 39-hour week be established for all FWA employes, with no overtime permitted.

Union spokesmen said Carmody expressed sympathy with the proposals, and promised to study them with the heads of the agencies.

Park Director From Mexico Sees D. C. System

The parks of Washington were host yesterday to Antonio de P. Araujo, director of parks for the state of Coahuila, Mexico, who came here to study the local system as the guest of Frank T. Gartside, acting parks superintendent.

Araujo is planning the development of a recreational project along the new 300-mile highway being constructed between Eagle Pass, Tex., and Satillo, Coahuila. Tourists' accommodations, wayside parks and a large formal park area in Satillo will be provided.

Araujo will inspect improvements in New York, Chicago and the Southwest.

Mrs. Grady Asks Limited Divorce

Mrs. Jacquelyn Grady, of 3107 N street northwest, yesterday sued for a limited divorce from James Francis Gardy, lecturer, writer and Farm Credit Administration official. She charged that he began treating her with cruelty a few hours after they were married and continued until they parted 11 years later.

Mrs. Grady was represented by Attorney Jean M. Boardman. She said her husband received $5,400 a year from the Government and $1,000 to $2,000 from writing and lecturing, and that he told her he expected to make $3,000 out of a book he recently wrote about government and business.

WPA Employe's Error, 32 Hours for Nothing

North Adams, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP).—A WPA worker learned to his dismay today that he had not only been laid off last week but that he had worked 32 hours for nothing this week—because his dismissal slip had lain unnoticed in his mailbox.

The 'Old Timers' Came Out to Play Again Yesterday at Garfield

"Homecoming Day" at Garfield Playground yesterday brought out the "old-timers" to mingle with the youngsters. Left—Nora Scruggs, 3, of 110 F street southeast, and Evelyn Sheridan, playground director, met J. I. White, 81, who played there as a boy. Center—Joseph Wilkinson, 6, teamed up with Benjamin McCullough, one of the "old-timers," who held the half-mile record when he was on Eastern High School's track team. He's "Joe's" hero now. Right—Frank P. Platz was one of those who returned to the scene of his boyhood days. He showed Billy Raum, 506 Fourth street southeast, who he used to throw those hooks with a soft ball

Roosevelt Signs WPA Sash Bill

By the Associated Press

President Roosevelt signed a bill yesterday to reimburse H. A. Dixon, owner of theatrical costumes, for the loss of a Russian blouse, an "extra long and wide" red satin sash, British army officer's breeches, and other striking apparel.

According to the records of the House Claims Committee, Corrington Gill assistant WPA administrator, reported that Thomas Cochran Ashwell, former Federal theater project director of Miami, Fla., rented the costumes from Dixon, and then absconded with them. A bill awarding Dixon $115.85 damages was passed by Congress.

President Praises CourseonReducing Traffic Fatalities

Ann Arbor, Mich., Aug. 9.—President Roosevelt declared that "the problem of adjusting highway transportation to modern conditions is of vital importance to every citizen," that a "sure approach to the solution is the training of individuals who plan to make a career of their work in various fields of accident prevention," in a letter released today in connection with the National Institute for Traffic Safety Training, to be held here, August 14 to 26.

The President's letter, addressed to Dr. Alexander G. Ruthven, president of the University of Michigan and honorary chairman of the institute, expressed interest in the opportunity offered for persons engaged in traffic safety work "to learn . . . ways of reducing the toll of traffic deaths."

The institute is sponsored by 11 national organizations, and will draw students from many parts of the Nation.

D. C. Doctor in Navy Now

Dr. George M. Hutto, of Alexandria, Va., and Dr. John W. Thomas, of the staff of St. Elizabeths Hospital, were among 42 assistant surgeons yesterday appointed to the Navy with the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, according to the Associated Press.

Garfield Playground Réunion Returns 450 to Childhood Scene

Spanish War Veteran Misses His Cronies; Clovers Baseball Club Meets Again, Defeats Team of Old Timers, 13-0

Usually it is the children who play at being grown-ups, but yesterday at Garfield Playground 450 grown-ups tried to recapture the carefree joys of their childhood at the fourth annual homecoming celebration.

Men and women of all walks of life could be seen on the grass-covered grounds. Fifty-nine-year-old Frank P. Platz, now of Hyattsville, Md., who left Garfield more than 40 years ago to shoulder a rifle in the Spanish-American War, was a little disappointed because most of his old cronies had "moved away or died off." But he took time to show 9-year-old Billy Raum, of 506 Fourth street southeast, how they used to play softball in the "good old days."

Old Ball Club Meets

The Clovers Baseball Club, which disbanded when America entered the World War, came together late in the afternoon and trimmed a team of "old-timers," 13 to 0. The Rev. Father Francis Connell, of St. Matthew's Church in Baltimore, came to Washington to play with his old Clover teammates. Policeman Howard Smith, of Seventh Precinct, was another old Cloverman, who came back for the game.

Robert White, 53, of 3315 Fifth street southeast, who played baseball at Garfield from 1900 to 1914, and Platz were among the "old-timers."

Miss Evelyn Sheridan, who has directed the playground for 19 years and answers to the name of Miss Susy, was disappointed when two of her star pupils did not show up. They were Federal Bureau of Investigation Director J. Edgar Hoover and Michael Callan, of the Liberty National Bank.

"Alumnus" Drenched

But she cheered up when, in accord with the annual custom, an "alumnus" was tossed into the wading pond before the baseball game began. The victim this year was Ben Zola, former assistant director of Garfield and now assistant director of the Langdon playground.

"My boys all make good husbands," Miss Susy said, in commenting upon the many boys and girls who played together at Garfield and later were married. "They always take good care of their children and bring them to the playground," she smiled.

While some of the men played baseball, the women played volleyball at the playground yesterday.

In the midst of a cheerful circle stood former Sergt. C. R. Brown of the Harbor Police. Brown, who is 65 years old, achieved playground immortality, so far as Miss Susy is concerned, by coming to Garfield for five years and bringing his 27 grandchildren along with him each time he came.

PresentGreyhound Terminal Leased

Present local terminal of Greyhound Lines at 1403 New York avenue northwest, has been leased from Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean for a period of 20 years by Arthur G. Dezendorf, operator of a large local chain of automobile service stations and parking lots, it was learned yesterday.

Dezendorf will rent a portion of the building to concessions and contemplates installation of bowling alleys and addition of a three-story parking garage above the existing structure. Occupancy will take place in December, at which time Greyhound Lines expects to be located in its new larger terminal at Twelfth street and New York avenue northwest.

Storm Continues Sweep Toward Bahamas

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

An excess of acids or poisons in your blood, when due to functional kidney disorders, may be the cause of nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills. Adv.
